So, Here’s the Trustee Meeting Article:

I know you’ve all been waiting with bated breath the news about the Trustee meetings updates from last quarter. Well, await no longer. Here’s the scoop. It is, actually, pretty interesting stuff, so you might want to read this article even though it’s not written in 24 point type. Just a suggestion.

Highlights of the Academic Affairs Committee included the approval of the Lee Edward Travis Institute for Bio-psychosocial Research in the School of Psychology and the In-Service Program in the U.S. for the School of World Mission. Georgia Grimes, Coordinator for the In-Service Program, explains that with the high number of immigrants in the U.S., missionaries don’t need to leave this country to minister cross-culturally. The program provides the opportunity for correspondence courses toward the SWM/MA and ThM degrees. Faculty from all three schools reviewed the Seminary’s mission statement with the intent of providing discussion topics for the three task forces created the President’s office earlier this year regarding Fuller’s evangelical identity, its constituencies for the ‘90’s, and its role in church renewal.

The Student Affairs Committee, chaired by Trustee Joan Yinger, heard reports from ASC which focused on the need for a required course which addresses sociopolitical issues faced in the contemporary church and work setting. They also expressed concern about the rising tuition costs (particularly in the MFT program) without commensurate financial aid resources. Dr. David Augsburger presented a visionary proposal advocating the need for community in seminary education. Robin Nygaard, Director of the Office of Women’s Concerns, presented the need to formulate a policy on sexual harassment. A committee will draft a policy which will be presented again at the June Trustee meetings.

The Development Committee discussed boring (but important) finance issues that we will address in a later issue.

Academic Affairs Committee Highlights

Travis Research Institute

The Lee Edward Travis Institute for Biopsychosocial Research was founded to provide outside research funding so that students can concentrate on their dissertations while doing research for the Institute. Although this system is the norm for most PhD programs, Fuller PhD candidates have been unable to be absorbed in their research while holding outside jobs. The focus of the research institute is to increase the understanding of the interaction between social systems, psychological states, religious beliefs, biological responses and health.

Dr. Warren Brown, Director of the Institute and a Professor of Psychology in the SOP, has been currently working in collaboration with the U.S. Public Health Service to develop a research program studying the mood, stress, health, immunity function of people who are being serviced by a care coordinator. Student Affairs Committee Highlights

Community Provides Context for Growth

Dr. David Augsburger, Professor of Theology in SOT, proposed a new model of ministry preparation at the Seminary. He has observed that Fuller primarily invests itself in the content of academic education. However, academic competence, while essential, is not sufficient preparation for ministry. Personal wholeness and readiness for ministry can only happen through personal transformation. It is the context of the Seminary experience that provides a perfect vehicle of change and growth.

Augsburger challenged the Trustees to begin to consider how the Seminary can create such a context to allow changes to take place. Our large commuter population makes it difficult to establish the kind of community that provides safety to heal our pasts and to discover who we are. He identifies two “need to regress and plug into significant people,” and “to establish profound, significant, and... continued on page 3

NEW PRAYER MEETING: What a wonderful resource of spiritual maturity we have here on our campus! On Fridays, at 10:30 a.m., in the Catalyst, students are meeting together to pray for one another. Already, we have seen the power of God manifest in providing beautiful testimonies of healing, financial breakthrough, and spiritual freedom. God is waiting to meet us when we ask. Some of us need to be praying for others, some of us need to be prayed for.

...dinators are new professionals being trained now to offer therapeutic support through encouraging phone calls and visits to people recovering from worker’s comp, hazardous occupational injuries and illnesses to get them back to work sooner. Multidisciplinary use of medical and psychological professionals has increasingly become the model of holistic modern health care, called psychoneuroimmunology... Dr. Brown is particularly interested in the “wellness community” of cancer patients and the positive effect Care Coordinators will have on the patients’ moods. “Wellness” is based on the idea that a person’s immunological system has the ability to strengthen itself through hope, faith, and social support.

An “invitation only” symposium will be held on April 26 on “Psychoneuroimmunology and Health Care Delivery Systems.” J. Everett Koop will be the keynote speaker for the symposium which will invite CEO’s, hospital chaplains, and other influential people in the health care industry.

safe relationships with mentors as well as other students." Cell groups and mentoring relationships are essential elements in the process of what Dr. Augsburger calls "the de-tribalization" of change. Family, church tradition, nationality are all elements which must be understood and overcome so that we can begin to experience the kind of community life that participates in the Kingdom of God, a larger tribe called the Body of Christ.

We have a tremendous opportunity to grow into inter-cultural citizens, given the marvelous diversity here at Fuller. Given our primarily commuter-based population, how can we benefit from our community to gain and share the wisdom of different world views, denominational perspectives, and backgrounds?

It is the desire of the Seminary leadership, administrators, faculty, trustees alike, to graduate people truly prepared to minister. Part of the function of this leadership is to provide not only curriculum and academic reforms, but to provide contexts to help this happen, to learn how to live life with others. He suggested a three year model of formation for pastoral preparation of all Fuller students, no matter what field the student will be entering. The model begins with a first year focus on globalization, encouraging students to discover their own identity in a broader context; the second year focus is regional where students work through the application of their specific discipline to the setting in which they expect to serve; and third year focus is on individual vocation, developing the student's own work in specific setting.

Take Time Out From the Kids

We all need it...for an evening out, a doctor’s appointment, lunch with a friend. But who will babysit? How will we pay for it? The best way is to help each other. In the Fuller babysitting co-op, families trade child care by “paying” each other with points. It’s been working for years and new members are welcome. Come to an orientation dessert at 7 p.m., Thursday, April 11 in Payton Hall 101. Bring the kids. Questions? Call Sheila Fleming, 359-4157 or Karen Adams 398-5777.

To Be or Not To Be in a Small Group

JIM WALLIS

Born in 1948, Jim Wallis grew up in an evangelical home and church, but he became separated from the church over the issues of racism and war. As a student at Michigan State University, he was active in the civil rights and anti-war struggles of the late 1960's. It was out of these movements that Jim had a conversion. He went to Trinity Evangelical Divinity School where he and some other students founded the Post American, the forerunner to Sojourners magazine.

Jim is the founder and pastor of Sojourners Community, a community that represents a growing movement within the church's life. Sojourners Magazine, of which he is editor, has become the connection point joining people, creating a network of faith and action among evangelicals, Catholics, mainline Protestants, the historic peace churches, the black churches, the charismatic renewal movement, the peace movement and non-Christians looking for a faith that engages the world.
