Committee Makes Suggestions for Promoting Spiritual Growth

Time and again we've all heard the stories about how seminary, with its academic focus, often leads to spiritual burn-out. Is burn-out or "fizzle-out" inherent in the seminary system or is there more that the institution can do to support students spiritually in their trial through seminary and in their preparation for ministry?

This is the question that the Spiritual Life Committee has been pondering. The Committee, chaired by Dr. Robert Banks, SOT faculty, had an agenda to evaluate student need with regard to programming for spiritual growth, and offering suggestions about how that need could be best met.

Busyness and pressures of other demands is the primary reason students (as well as faculty) do not participate in many of the already-offered activities promoting spiritual growth. (Chapel attendance and participation in denominational meetings is very low) Yet, a significant proportion of the students surveyed felt that more should be done by Fuller to foster spiritual growth. Students consistently made reference to three areas that could facilitate such growth: Classroom devotions, interaction with mentors, and practical integration of course material.

The Committee presented their studies and recommendations last quarter to the Board of Trustees, Administration, and Joint Faculty. Rob Banks identifies a common thread throughout their report: "What we model in our corporate life and informal relationships will have the strongest influence in spiritually forming one another." Their top operating principle in evaluation was "The fundamental importance of spiritual and communal formation alongside academic excellence and professional development."

Their recommendations take the form of three levels of difficulty of implementation and financial commitment that relate to a wide range of seminary activities and structures. The first level of implementation (the one with no additional cost) has already begun. The recommendations include: additional emphasis on devotional times in class, building more small group times into class curriculum, developing more courses in spirituality across Divisions/Schools, and setting aside a day of prayer for vision and renewal. It also made suggestions for provisions to alter committee and tenure requirements for faculty to increase their availability for students.

In addition, Grant Milliken, Director of Academic Information Systems, has been working with faculty, administration, and with student input to develop a new schedule which would allow for a common lunch hour following Chapel that would encourage relationships and community-building.

On another level, that involving modest financial considerations, the Committee has recommended that the seminary open up campus public spaces so that they are more conducive to socializing. This would involve possibly adding more tables in the Garth, more seating on the grass and pathways, adding porches and decks and transforming Barker Commons so that it is "less ornamental and more convivial." On the third level of commitment would be the long term goal of creating or building student common rooms for SWM and SOT (similar to the SOP lounges) students.

Thuan Vuong is on a quest that began with his birth in Saigon, back in 1953, as the privileged son of a South Vietnamese diplomat, continued from 1972-90, with his incarnational ministry to the poor of south central Los Angeles, and continues today with his studies as an MDiv student at Fuller. It is this unusual path that has shaped what Thuan calls his “theology of community,” and is directing him to seek a deeper understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The great turning point in Thuan’s life was his coming to Los Angeles in 1972, to attend USC as an architectural design student. Just prior to his departure from Hong Kong, a high school friend told him about Jesus Christ. This encounter, coupled with the turmoil of war and uncertainty, led Thuan to pray, “God, if you’re the Savior, then I call out to you.”

When Thuan arrived in America, it seems God called back. Rather than find the “streets of gold” so often envisioned by those outside the U.S., Thuan stumbled upon L.A.’s “skid row,” and was deeply impacted by what he saw. Before long, Thuan was living in one of World Impact’s first community houses in Los Angeles, while earning his college degree at nearby USC. This ministry included the now famous Neighborhood Bible Clubs and group discipleship approach. After graduating in ’76, Thuan became a full-time staff member with World Impact, until his departure to Fuller in ’90.

Thuan Vuong looks back fondly on those years, saying, “Being poor is not good. But the poor do know how to live together, share and network together in a way we can learn from.” Living together has become Thuan’s greatest hope—and frustration—for the church. “As I understand the kingdom of God, it involves a group of people living together as a witness. That’s said so often, it’s almost meaningless, yet that’s the goal!”

This goal, along with his life experience, has produced deeply felt convictions in Thuan. “It’s my gut feeling, and I’m not sure it’s affirmed by Fuller, is that the only way to do ministry is communally. Individual ministry is out.” Thuan says he’s in search of churches modeling this approach, but hasn’t found many. “I think the church that really lives out the gospel will always be on the fringe.”

Thuan is hopeful, however, that his study at Fuller (and the MDiv degree he earns) will help him promote a gospel vision of community in which rich and poor live together, sharing their lives in a context of accountability. “It seems a lot of people are afraid to do that,” he laments, “including me!” After a sigh and moment’s reflection, Thuan Vuong concludes with a smile, “But I want to try.”

Bridge-to-Sobriety

“Making All Things New”

by Jim Johnson, SOP Student

Last week, as an introduction to step 4 of the 12 steps of recovery, I asked you to be willing to take a “look inside”. I suggested that a fearless and searching inventory of our assets and our limitations was important in developing spiritually. Working step 4 allows one to become aware of what motivates his or her behavior. Awareness can then lead to having choices in how we think, feel and act.

Too many Christians are no longer led by the Holy Spirit. Instead they seem driven by old needs to perform or to achieve or to fix others. Still others are never quite able to get that ministry going and are plagued by recurring cycles of struggle and self sabotage. Either way, the Kingdom and our lives, suffer as boredom, resentment, depression, control or burnout take over our thoughts and actions. How much more satisfied and effective we can be when our being is Christ-centered, not self or other-centered. Step 4 helps us work with God in identifying and resolving those limitations and destructive patterns in a way that sets us free from our dysfunction. Somehow Christ works through a small group in a way that allows for a safe and honest look at our lives. We are led past our denial and suppression and avoidance to a new insight and awareness difficult to access individually.

Henri J.M. Nouwen in his book Making All Things New tells us that “the spiritual life is not a life before, after, or beyond our everyday existence. No, the spiritual life can only be real when it is lived in the midst of the pains and joys of the here and now. Therefore we need to begin with a careful look at the way we think, speak, feel, and act...in order to become more fully aware of our hunger for the Spirit.”

Begin “making all things new” in your life today. Box 1237

Ministry Development Seminar
The recruitment, training, and nurture of lay volunteers is critical in many aspects of the church’s program and mission. What are the skills and attitudes required to mobilize your congregation for ministry? How do you motivate, challenge, prevent burnout, and help lay people integrate their volunteer experience with their faith? Reverend Bill Doulos, Director Emeritus-Union Station, will share his insights on “Mobilizing Volunteers for Ministry” on Thursday, February 20th, 10-11 am in Payton 101.

The seminar is designed to provide enrichment for students involved in Field Education internships. It is also open to all supervisors and other interested students.

Fireman’s Visit
Fuller families and friends are invited for a pre-school movie on fire safety and a demonstration on the use of fire extinguishers Tuesday Feb. 18th, from 10:15-11:30 am at Madison House.

Editorial: All About Busyness

by Peggy Still, The Fuller Foundation

The story at Bethany found in Luke 10:38 tells us that Martha and Mary, Lazarus’ sisters, owned the spacious house where Jesus perhaps felt more at home than anywhere else during his last days on earth.

With Jesus and his disciples in her home, we see Martha busy about much serving, and Mary sitting at the Lord’s feet, hearing his words. We hear Martha gently complaining to Jesus, “Lord doest thou care that my sister has left me to serve alone?” Perhaps Jesus smiled at Martha, glad for her naturalness with him and answered, “Martha, Martha, you are anxious and bustling about many matters, when there is need for but few or even one thing. Your sister Mary has selected the good portion, and she is not to be deprived of it.”

I’m sure the the superb hospitality Jesus found in Martha’s home was important to him. No one enjoyed her cooking more, found her spacious and beautiful home more inviting than he did. But always he had the real issue in view. When he told the hard-working older sister that her younger sister had made the wise choice, he was in no way belittling Martha, nor being ungrateful for her care. He did not say that Mary should not be helping her, what he said was that if there is a choice to show concern for the feeding of one’s spirit than the feeding of one’s stomach; perhaps Mary should have helped more. Obviously, she was not the domestic type like her sister. But again, since this incident is told in some detail in the Scriptures, it seems that Jesus knew Martha to be too centered in her house work to the neglect of her soul. Jesus knew the exact state of Martha’s innerself; most likely she was unconsciente of this imbalance within her. Mary and Martha were perhaps different as day and night, and Jesus accepted them that way. Mary had chosen the better part by sitting hour after hour exposed to his words and his person. Martha had been busy doing things for him, with little time to listen to and absorb his teaching. What Martha did was to provide a needed service and not to be minimized at all. But he was intent upon teaching them balance, and he desires no less for you and me.

When the list of things to do becomes so great and I have to make a choice between busyness and quiet time, I hope like Mary, I’ll choose the good portion which shall not be taken from me.

The Hour

The smooth sun rises
And moonlight slips like a dream
Out where stars age softly on Time’s turning love.

The hour dawns upon the table
Hard as weeping
And the slow sad ruin of the world
Wears down to a whisper
A breaking that is not a bone.

Like the sea pounds the land.
Like lightening knifes the dark
Still thundering in his eyes...

Battered man and the movement meet
By the wound of forever
The cross that cuts the veil.
That death and joy shall hear
In the loudest kind of light
Man was made for making.

Homegrown Talent Finds Loyal Following

Performances and shows put on by students are, usually by definition, non-professional; amateur entertainment does not even approach the quality of art produced by polished stage personalities. So what do mere students have to offer their community?

More than anything else, it is the fact that they are students - our own fellow students - that has drawn sizable crowds to Fuller's night life over the first half of this quarter and promises to do the same in the coming weeks.

Take, for example, Ground Zero's rock concert on the 17th. These Fuller upperclassmen/alumni were no pros: their vocals were not loud enough and their stage presence was lacking. But they drew in the crowds: an estimated 80 people were in the audience, cheering on their buddies and soaking in the tunes. Moreover, their original compositions - "Dear Friend", "True Blue", "White Knights" and others - showed outstanding creativity and perceptive reflection on the Christian experience.

Or consider the "Celebration Concert" of Elizabeth Mercer and Colleen McKibbon on the 25th. Their Christian contemporary melodies - borrowed from the likes of Michael W. Smith - were well-performed and well-mixed, but that was not why a comparable sized crowd had come to Travis: they wanted to hear Elizabeth and Colleen - and they got what they wanted, with solos from each of them interspersed between their harmonized duets.

Meanwhile, there was no professional DeeJay with high-tech sound equipment or light show at the Bresee Boyz quarterly house party the night before. No, these were pre-recorded dance tapes blaring those same old standard '50s tunes that we always hear at 1233 Bresee Ave. But that didn't stop a record crowd of Fullerites - 150 by 11:00 - from stopping by and hanging out with their buddies. Even the Bresee alumni made appearances: John 'doin' da butt' Foley, Dave Guild, Doug Beck.

Three cases in point: professional talent is nice, but there's something about having your own colleagues - people you know - up on stage or behind the speakers. They might not be stars "in the world's eyes", but they are certainly stars at home. And you can even go get ice cream with them after the show. Isn't that what community is all about?
