When I came to Fuller in the fall of 1991, I came excited about this new direction for my life. I also came as a person broken by tremendous pain, shame, and loss.

My distressed marriage of 20 years had fallen apart and I was in the midst of bitter divorce proceedings. In addition I was experiencing a double "empty nest" as both of my daughters packed to go to college. The breakup of our family was so painful. I’ll never forget the day the four of us went through our home dividing up the family belongings. We laughed about who would get the small frying pan, yet all of us were acutely aware of the sadness and tragedy that was taking place.

At the same time, I lost my job and ministry working with adolescents and their families. Relationships with many friends and my church family were strained and/or severed. My extended family was shaken and unsure of how to respond. I moved from my home, from my community of many years, and completely relocated. All the important doors of my life slammed closed. Everything that had defined who I was as a person was suddenly gone. I was no longer primarily the mother, the wife, and the youth minister.

In the course of these changes, I had sensed God’s call to train as a professional counselor. Graduate education became a viable option for me. I had been accepted at several schools and chose Fuller primarily because of its reputation for integration of Christian faith and psychology.

Making the move and beginning a whole new life was agonizingly difficult, yet I found that this door opened opportunities of restoration and renewed purpose. I found at Fuller a place to learn what it means to be a person created (even re-created) in the image of God. I found a setting where I could wrestle with faith issues and begin to reconstruct my belief system which had failed under the pressure and shaking of real life. Here, I found an environment where I could face the issues which had contributed to the dysfunction and final fatal blows to my marriage. I began to discover what it means to engage in healthy relationships and to participate in a community of people who, although human and fallible, care about each other. I found excellent training in a new vocation as a “wounded healer” who could be instrumental in God’s healing of other people’s lives.

It strikes me that God has had to pry my hands from many of the things that I have tenaciously held: an irrelevant belief system, a failed marital relationship, a superficial and stagnant way of being and living in the world -- none of which glorified God. The prying loose left me feeling anxious, desperate, uncomfortably suspended as if the very ground were pulled out from underneath me. Yet, my hands and life could not be filled with different gifts and experiences God had (and has) in store for me as long as I refused to let go. I never would have planned for or even guessed that my life would take the difficult course it has. Yet, I’m grateful for the ways I’ve grown and continue to grow as a person and in my relationships with God and others.

Opportunities for stretching, learning, and

I bet you guys are all asking "What happened to the food?" Don't worry, I'm still eating. In fact, even if I was on my death bed I'd probably be sending out for Domino's pizza. Anyway, the last two weeks I've been thinking about more than food. It scared me at first because the last time this happened, I was swamped with calls from the National Enquirer. A lot of really bad stuff is going on in the world right now. Not a day goes by without hearing about the skater, the singer or that man who lost his, well you know. Amidst all this chaos there was some good news, however. Jesus was found to be still on his throne; the shaking's almost stopped; and even amongst the rubble and homelessness of Santa Monica, I managed to behold another beautiful sunset at the beach. I heard that some people at Fuller Seminary are actually writing loving stuff about each other on the bulletin board. The food at the refectory is actually quite good this year and Grace is making coffee that's tasty enough to make angels consider falling. Ulf still cracks me up every time he comes into the mailroom, and Michael is still trying to make sense of it all. Betty Berg always takes time to squeeze a hello through the mailboxes. And, the gang at the International Students Office make even a displaced Texan feel at home. God bless Dr. McClendon for always taking a genuine interest in what going on, and to Colin Brown who's probably the politest person I know. Dr. Hagner always manages to laugh at my jokes even if their not funny (along with the rest of the mailroom), and sister Liz usually manages to calm my fears of the green men who live under the sponge. Casey Swanson is like canned sunshine, and brother B.J.'s hello manages to brighten the darkest of days. Thanks to Anita and friends at the library for making me almost feel like Mark Twain, and to sister Marion for sweetly reminding me that I'm not. I'd really like to thank all of you for taking the time to read my column and reminding me that life can still be good, even for those of us called to the mailroom ministry. Please be sure and tell someone that you appreciate them this week and spread a little love around cause it's better for you than butter and best of all (It's fat free).☆

Take Your Marriage For a Trip!

What would you think about a Friday night and Saturday with your spouse at the Country Inn in Ventura, food and lodging, AND a seminar that will enrich your individual lives and your marriage - all for $60.00.

The Seminar - Marriage as a Journey to Wholeness - is presented by Gary Brainerd, Ph.D. Gary is a graduate of the FTS School of Psychology, a clinical psychologist, and an adjunct faculty member in the Division of Marriage and Family. The eight hour seminar is based on Harville Hendrix' best selling Getting the Love You Want. Gary is a certified Imago Relationship Therapist and is presenting Dr. Hendrix' "Getting the Love You Want Workshop" in Southern California. The seminar will cover understanding the unconscious needs of relationships that are often the source of marital conflict, developing communication skills that promote safety and growth, revitalizing the marriage relationship to heal old wounds and recapturing romance and play in marriage. The format includes input from Gary, reflection and writing time, as well as dialogue time for each couple. The seminar presents a marital system that is one of the most in-depth approaches to marital growth available today and is presented within a Christian faith framework that encourages couples to cooperate with God's plan for wholeness in their marriage.

The Country Inn in Ventura is a wonderful setting with king-sized beds, microwave, refrigerator, television and VCR. Friday night hors d'oeuvres, Saturday breakfast and lunch are provided. Saturday night accommodations are also a possibility. The cost for all of this is $60.00 (except extending into Saturday night). Reserve your spots today by sending your checks to the Office of Christian Community payable to OCC. For more information call OCC 584-5322.

growth have come from many sources: time alone with God, relationships with Fuller friends, personal therapy, lectures and coursework, and involvement in campus life. Professors like Ray Anderson, Cameron Lee, and Lewis Smedes emphasized integration of my faith with life and profession as well as relevance in my theology. Judy and Jack Balswick and Janice Strength not only taught me valuable lessons about family systems and therapeutic intervention, they shared their very lives with me. Thom Needham, Arch Hart, Bert Jacklitch, and others encouraged me to pursue God-given dreams that would further “fill out” the person God created me to be. In Jim Butler’s Pentateuch class, I realized that even though I still experience some of the trauma of a desert experience, like the children of Israel, I can thank God that I am no longer in captivity!

One of the richest gifts to me here at Fuller has been interaction and friendship with other students who have openly shared their lives and their process of personal and spiritual struggle and growth with me. Several classmates offered very tangible assistance during my first year when I became increasingly ill and had to undergo major surgery. Marriage and Family Therapy students encouraged and supported me in my leadership as Psychology Graduate Union Co-President in my second year.

Students who have been here longer than I have impressed me with their courage and determination not only to survive, but creatively LIVE through this process of graduate education. New students have inspired me with their stories about God’s call to ministry. Alumni have imparted hope that there is life after Fuller!

In my interactions with Rich Mouw, Rob Johnston, Trustees, Student Services, student government leaders, and a host of others in the various offices at Fuller, I have been privileged to see firsthand the concern for students and work done behind the scenes on our behalf. These people have a tremendous investment in providing a quality educational experience for students. They dedicate themselves to support what God is doing in and through the lives of students while we are at Fuller and as we go out from here to various places of ministry.

As I finish this last quarter of my Masters program here and face an uncertain future, I am grateful for the ways in which my Fuller experience has supported my “beginning again”. I am forever changed by the people who have impacted my life here. It is my hope that each of you will take responsibility to seek and find resources at Fuller which will encourage you in your process of becoming all that God created you to be. ✡

THE BIG THREE

The three big service concerns students have on campus are high tuition costs, lack of parking space and the use of ASC funds. Last Tuesday, the All Seminary Council organized an open forum so that the student body could be better informed on the present status of each of these issues and to have an opportunity to ask questions. H. Lee Merritt (Vice President for Finance), Larry J. Lloyd (Supervisor of Security and Parking) and Barbara Driskill (ASC Treasurer) gave excellent presentations to those assembled. This column will highlight the issue of payments and next week the concern over parking facilities.

Fuller Financial Allocations: Using high tech overheads, Merritt presented a comprehensive picture of both the revenue and expenditure for the seminary. He indicated that 74% of the revenue comes from tuition fees of which 19% is from the Continuing Education and Extended Education programs. Grant-in-aid awards, in total, amount to 18% of tuition revenue. Further, in the last two financial years, the Board of Trustees have managed the $28 million investment portfolio extremely well and investments have yielded an overall return of 20% per annum. Seminary policy is to spend six and a half percent of market value each year.

Merritt went on to say that because of Fuller’s size, the institution is able to be managed with greater efficiency than smaller seminaries. This results in Fuller having instructional expenses as high as 54% compared with the average ATS school of 48%, with endowment per student in the top quartile of comparable schools. With the electricity bill for the psychology building alone being $100,000 each year, Lee Merritt, David R. Adams (Director of Financial Systems & Budgets), Christine Hong (Controller), Hugo Bouse (Director of Financial Aid) and all their staff, do a great job in managing the seminary’s finances.

ASC Finances: Asked the question “What do we get for our ASC dollar?” Driskill emphasized the fact that the All Seminary Council is a service organization with most of the monies from student fees going to wages for advocacy and community activities by the three Unions and the six Concerns Committees, as well as the services of the computer lab, sports program and vending machines. The student government treasurer suggested to the gathering that it may be time to restructure the ASC budget in order to achieve financial unity and equity.

The full report from Lee Merritt and Barbara Driskill is displayed on the ASC notice board located opposite the Board of Declaration. Throughout their presentations both financiers emphasized their availability to the student body to answer any questions that students may have. As Driskill said, “All the students should know what happens to their dollar.” Do you?

Warm regards,
Rob Gallagher.

FULLER STUDENT FUND—APPLY NOW!
The Fuller Student Fund is distributed through the International Students Multi-Cultural, Missions, Peace and Justice, and Women’s Concerns Committees. We encourage any student to apply for funding if s/he will be involved in missions, a volunteer service project, or internship. Applications and Fuller Student Fund history are available in the ASC office. Please submit applications by March 11.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT
Are you interested in becoming more involved with the students at Fuller and participate in the All Seminary Council? Start thinking about running for an office. Nominations will be taken in the ASC office, 1st week of Spring Quarter.

MUSEUM OF TOLERANCE
The Peace and Justice Concerns and the Multi-Cultural Concerns Committees are sponsoring a trip to the Museum of Tolerance on Sunday, April 10. Watch for details. Also, if you would be interested in helping with related events the week prior, please contact Conrad Pinoni or Tracy Barber.

PH.D POSSIBILITIES
Do you think you’d like to be called Dr., or Professor one day? Want to be able to dialogue, write, and teach others about Christianity? Perhaps a Ph.D is in your future! Join the TGU for a brown bag lunch on Feb. 24, 11:45-1:00 pm in the Faculty Commons. Joining us will be Dr. Miroslav Volf and Steve Kamm from the Center For Advanced Theological Studies, and Rev. Rik Stevenson, Associate Director for African American Ministries and a Doctoral Candidate in the School of Theology. Bring your lunch and your questions about Ph.D studies.

CHURCH GROWTH AT WHAT COST?
“...Christians experience some paroxysms of curiosity about their theology of reconciliation... after all the noise about evangelism and growing Churches, there is still the sense that reconciliation represents the unfinished agenda of the Church...Even after years of hearing about homogeneous racial-ethnic units for purposes of everything from real estate to Church growth, the notion that reconciliation is still a Christian ideal simply won’t go away.”

—Dr. Bill Pannell from The Coming Race Wars. A Cry for Reconciliation.

Just a thought brought to you by the Peace and Justice Concerns Committee.

LAST CALL FOR THE FULLER FOLLIES!
The deadline to submit your act for the Fuller Follies was yesterday, so ACT NOW and call Ana to reserve your spotlight in the show. Word is out that this is going to be a “world class” event to go down in Fuller’s history of humor. Don’t you dare miss it!

THE MATZ IN CONCERT
Fuller’s famous and favorite acapella group is performing once again on Friday, March 4. A special guest performer will begin at 7:00 pm and lead us into an evening of music and fun for all. Mark your calendars now!
