The Semi (10-24-1994)

Fuller Theological Seminary
When asked to define the call of God upon her life, Kathleen Hart's quick response is, "I am compelled by His love!"

One does not have to spend very long in Kathleen’s presence to sense the genuineness of this "compelling" in her life. As Fuller’s Chaplain to Student Wives, this warm and engaging South African has nurtured a ministry to the wives of Fuller students for over a decade. "I love this ministry," she says, leaning across the table between us. "I love these women. It just seems to be in my nature to nurture and to love. And when you see the results...I wouldn't want to be doing anything else." I believe her!

Kathleen is married to Dr. Arch Hart, Dean of the School of Psychology. "My husband was the Assistant City Engineer in Pietermaritzburg in South Africa. Half way through our life he decided to go back to study." After Arch completed his PhD in Psychology, the Harts then made the move to America for a year to do post-doctoral work at Fuller. That was 1971. In 1973 Arch was invited back to Fuller to join the faculty.

"Visas were a terrible problem," Kathleen recalls. "We returned on an F1 visa. We were in a house away from campus, living on $700 a month. We struggled. I was lonely and isolated. I questioned God, 'Is this really the right place to be?' And yet, how the Lord has graciously helped us."

Kathleen’s passion for ministry to women originated in South Africa. Through informal neighborhood Bible studies she was able to share her faith, and the Scriptures, with women who had no church background and no exposure to the Bible. As an accomplished speaker, Kathleen soon found, upon arriving in America, many opportunities to speak at women’s seminars and retreats. In the midst of this, the Spirit spoke to her, telling her that the Lord had something special for her to do. "I shared this with a friend who is a very well known speaker and author. Immediately my friend confidently responded. 'The Lord’s going to bring you onto the platform. I’m going to nurture you and bring you along with me into the big-time.' And she added, 'Big-time dollars!' Well, immediately there were dollar signs in my eyes! Arch is going to be so happy with me, I thought, and I’ll be speaking to thousands! But then God said, 'Kathleen, I’ll open a door. You just wait!'"

At that time, as President of the Faculty and Administrators’ Wives group, Kathleen collected some money to make Christmas packages for international students. After calling every international student enrolled, she sat in the ISS office and waited for the students to come and collect their packages. "And they came!" Kathleen recalls with enthusiasm. "I saw these women from all over the world and they just won my heart. It all fell together in a second. The Lord said to me, 'This is it, my child.' That’s how it began. I’ve ended up behind the scenes, with no big name, and putting my own money into it. But I know it’s from the Lord."

As an international herself, Kathleen understands the importance of having a place to share those initial fears and anxieties upon entering a new culture. "If you don’t deal with these fears, you will simply put up a barrier between yourself and others around you. You will end up resenting this seminary, and even your own husband for bringing you here. It is so vital that we offer these women a safe environment in which to deal with these fears."

Out of this passion, Kathleen began meeting regularly with these international spouses. Soon the American wives were asking to join. The ministry expanded. So did Kathleen’s vision. That was eleven years ago. Since the commencement of this

The hour spent with these five women, recalling memories, sharing perspectives, and offering critiques of the seminary experience, could make one wish that some discussions in theology classes were this informed. These women are real, and because of that, their interaction is down-to-earth, perceptive, and could never be described as "not of this world."

We began by talking about their initial encounters with seminary life. "It was definitely one of the most intimidating experiences of my life," recalls Carla. "I felt so isolated and scared." Carla and her husband, while still in Houston, accepted the offer of a small house about a mile from campus, sight unseen. "We took it because we thought a house would be better than an apartment, but it wasn't a good situation. In fact there were structural problems and we had to be moved very suddenly." Carla remembers the first night well. "We had a group of young single guys next door who were having a party that night with lots of alcohol and loud music. Josh was just three months old and I was up nursing him in the living room at 4 a.m. It sounded like the party was in the next room, the music was blaring so loudly. I just sat there and cried and cried."

Dee Dee remembers the tears too. "I did nothing but cry for the first 6 months! I remember I had a car accident the very first day of school. The cops looked at me and said, 'Welcome to California.'" Devi moved to L.A. from two years in Cleveland. "We were so excited to be arriving. Living in Cleveland is much cheaper than California—around $215 a month for a nice apartment. When we saw that we were paying $810 for rent we thought, Wow! We must be living in a nice place." Disappointment was inevitable.

Amy, who moved here from the Midwest, remembers, "I didn't expect the adjustment to be so hard. I didn't expect to be fearful where I was living, and I didn't expect to be sad. I'm so much an extrovert, and yet all I could do was sit on the floor alone. I couldn't face it."

The adjustments did come, however, and all agree enthusiastically that the depth of friendship and support they have discovered at Fuller is unequaled in their histories. Karen adds, "Adjustments always take time. But there was still that sense for all of us that we knew that the Lord had brought us here. There was that deep sense of God calling us here. There is that confidence that if the Lord guided us here, then whatever we face He will be faithful." Heads nod all around. One gets the sense, throughout our conversation, that the call of God is a compelling force for all of these women.

Dee Dee affirms that call as a major motivating factor in her life. "When I got married, I said to my husband, 'I don't want to be in your ministry. I want to be in our ministry.' I'm called to ministry." Dee Dee recalls, "we pastored a small church in rural Texas where the pastor's wife was simply taken for granted. I was the children's church director, the praise and worship leader, the Sunday school teacher, the women's coordinator, even the church janitor! I was burned out after two years. Women in these situations are so taken for granted. We are treated so differently at Fuller. We are taken seriously and valued. Being here has changed me though, and now I have to go back into those same situations."

While all of these women agreed that women are taken seriously at Fuller, sometimes they feel frustrated with the institution's response to student wives. They search for the right words. They don't want to be seen as complaining, and yet, at the same time, they want to be honest. As committed members of the wives' support groups on campus, there is a shared frustration that there is no financial commitment on the part of the seminary to their development for ministry. Carla articulates that frustration. "I am beginning to want to know how much Fuller is spending on recruiting women for the academic programs, and then how much they are investing in supporting the spouses. Just last week I went to Kathleen Hart's Bible study and I came away feeling so affirmed by her ministry, and yet at the same time feeling abandoned by the institution. Why do we have to jump through so many hoops just to find a place to meet or even a place to park? Kathleen paid for the rent on the Congregational Church herself for many years. Now some of the trustees' wives are helping out, but the institution is not."

When asked what they need from Fuller Seminary, their answers are varied and thoughtful. Karen begins, "We need Fuller Seminary to be more family-friendly. We all know intellectually that academics isn't everything, but with the constant demands made on our husbands, I think the Seminary still has the perception that the average student is a young, single male who is totally supported by his church or family. With church commitments, internships, studies, marriage, children, financial commitments—something is going to suffer. Unfortunately, it is often your marriage or your family." Amy adds, "With everything on Chris's plate, I start to get really jealous of his time. Sometimes he has to say to me, 'Well, don't count on me being available this weekend.'"
Frankly, I wish I had a movie to review, but Kim and I just haven’t had the time or finances to make it happen. But then it struck me, neither do most of you, so why not review some of the things we do have time for, like the billboards advertising the movies. Granted, billboards aren’t exactly the greatest indicator of a movie’s merit, but they do form our first impressions. For instance, I have been thoroughly captivated by The Quiz Show ad, mainly because it caused me tension. It’s not the tension that is suggested by a faceless man, whose hidden identity and ethos beckon to be discovered; rather, I keep wondering, if they can plaster this poster all over town, why couldn’t they afford to make it at least marginally interesting? Really, how much did Redford pay someone for that concept? Maybe understatement is the new definition for Hollywood chic, but if that were the case someone should let ‘ol Sly and Sharon in on the secret.

This brings me to the next ad that has polluted the sides of busses all through the San Gabriel Valley. Of course, I’m referring to The Professional: Stallone and Stone. Sure, they both possess a certain primal attraction, but let the word righteousness steer us clear of this “sin”ematic atrocity. We’re all adults and free to make our own decisions, but let the Spirit guide us clear of what promises to be a defiling endeavor. On a more positive note, The Shawshank Redemption has a certain mystical appeal to it. Here you have a man standing in a Jesus-on-the-Cross posture while facing an onslaught of rain, suggesting some form of baptism. The name even hints that the moral/spiritual development of a character might be involved (which would be a refreshing change). My industry connections have highly recommended this one, but I can only vouch for the poster.

OK, so you’re probably not convinced that they should have a new Oscar category for billboards but I can only work with what I’ve got. Hopefully, next time I’ll have an actual movie to review, but in the meantime enjoy and learn from what you can. I doubt that I will ever see a billboard as lovely as a tree.

Your Concerns Are Our Priority

We need your help. If the All Seminary Council is to have your concerns as our top priority, then we need to find out what they are. Let us know what you are feeling. Right now your Graduate Union and Concerns Committee representatives are probing their constituencies in order to listen to your issues.

Last year, the ASC found your response to student concerns an invaluable set of guide-rails that we brought before trustees, administration and faculty. In other words, we want to make Fuller an even better place for leadership training and development, and you have a major part to play. That's why we need you to speak to us. We are ready to listen. The steps we are taking to bring this about are as follows:

 Probe - The ASC is out there probing to tap in on those issues that are concerning the students. Talk to your Graduate Union and Concerns Committees about your concerns. Write on the Board of Declaration. Whatever means you choose, let us know.

Prioritize - The Council has limited time and energy. We have less than nine months in short-term advocacy. So we need to prioritize your issues. From your feedback we will select three or four major concerns and endeavor to process those towards some solution. It is better to select a few key issues that affect the majority of the students than to spread our energies over a number of different areas.

Process - The ASC is invited by Fuller's administration to be participants in over fifty committees at all levels of community life. This is a privilege that allows us direct access to the administrators who can bring about any changes that may be needed. The present climate on campus is one of cooperation and partnership, in no small part due to the leadership of the president and the provost. All we need is your response.

Warm regards in Christ,
Rob Gallagher

SPORTS NOTES
Check the sports board to get an updated schedule for Intramural football and to find out what team you play on. It's been great to see everybody out there. Your attitude and involvement has been outstanding! Try to call your captain to let him know if you can't make a game.

PLEASE PRAY...
1990-92 ASC President, Roberto Colon, and former School of Theology Dean, Dr. Robert Meye, are recovering from surgery. Please pray for a speedy and complete recovery for both of them.

THANK YOU, THANK YOU, THANK YOU!
Special thanks goes to: Randy Smith, Director of Building Services, who put a new light above the Board of Declaration in response to student requests last year; Barbara Eurch-Rascoe, Doug Gregg, Sandee Masuda Hunt, Dr. Rob Johnston, Ann McKusick and Dr. Jorge Taylor for their participation in the ASC's Administrative Orientation October 7; Mike Rewers for initiating and organizing Fuller's new Student Calendar, and James Kim, Mike Rewers and Gino Vaccaro for their great job on the new ASC brochure.

FREE PAPER-WRITING SEMINAR
Do you break into a cold sweat at the thought of all those term papers? They why not attend the free ASC Paper-Writing Seminar. It will give you practical guidelines on how to write a great term paper, and give you valuable opportunities to ask questions about your school's particular paper requirements. Part I: Friday, October 28, 10-12 noon in Travis Auditorium (for all students) and Part II: Friday, November, 4, 10-12 noon in two places--Travis Auditorium for SWM students, and Payton 303 for SOT students. Any questions? Call Nancy at 584-5452.
Making Space for God

"Are you tired? Worn out? Burned out on religion? Come to me. Get away with me and you’ll recover your life. I’ll show you how to take a real rest. Walk with me and work with me—watch how I do it. Learn the unforced rhythms of grace. I won’t lay anything heavy or ill-fitting on you. Keep company with me and you’ll learn to live freely and lightly."

(Matt. 11:28-30, from Eugene Peterson, The Message)

"Come to me," Jesus says. When we hear these words, we become aware that our own agendas, fears and busyness too often stand in the way of God’s invitation to us. How often do we actually take our own plans to God for his blessing, and come away empty-handed, while all the while God stands with outstretched hands to take us in his arms, ready for us to take Him in ours, waiting for us to come to Him. "The questions that matter in life are remarkably few," says Oswald Chambers, "and they are all answered by the words—Come to me." Not "do this", or "do that", but simply "come to me." If we will come to Jesus, our actual lives will be brought into conformity with our real desires. Jesus is the touchstone. Personal relationship with Jesus alters everything. Wherever Jesus comes, He establishes rest, the rest of activity that is completely natural and lacking in self-consciousness because it is a completely natural outflow of His relationship with the Father.

There is no more appealing invitation in all the Bible, even in all the world, than Jesus’ invitation for us to come to him; and nothing is more needed for our bodies, minds and spirits than to make space for God and enter into the restful activity of Jesus. Our culture holds out to us an exhausting, grasping, mind-controlling, introspective, performance-oriented, feverish pant after control, success, and accomplishment. Jesus says, "Come to me...for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls." While storms rage around us we are invited into the very eye of the hurricane where there is perfect peace, perfect rest. Jesus shows us the way, indeed, He is the way. Today, every day, every moment Jesus is inviting you and me into His rest.

If we will come to Jesus, our actual lives will be brought into conformity with our real desires. Jesus is the touchstone. Personal relationship with Jesus alters everything. Wherever Jesus comes, He establishes rest, the rest of activity that is completely natural and lacking in self-consciousness because it is a completely natural outflow of His relationship with the Father.

The staff of the Office of Christian Community is here to support your relationship with God while you’re at Fuller. In addition to these Fall activities, please feel free to stop by the office to talk or pray. We are located on the second floor of the Catalyst building or you can reach us at (818) 584-5322, or drop us a note at FTS Box 243.

Tuesdays at Ten

Tuesdays at Ten has become a great opportunity to gather for prayer training and experience. Every Tuesday from 10 - 10:40 a.m., during the chapel hour, in Payton 101B there will be brief sharing on various areas of prayer and then the rest of the time will be spent in prayer. Doug Gregg and Cathy Schaller, among others, will facilitate this opportunity to grow in intimacy with God.

Prayer Groups

OCC is collecting a list of groups which meet regularly to pray. If you meet with such a group, please contact us at 584-5322 with particulars about time, location and prayer focus so that we can inform others. If you are looking for a prayer group to join, please come by our office for information about the various groups already formed.

John Stott

On Friday, November 11 from 10-12, in Travis Auditorium, John Stott, a veteran evangelical stalwart, will join the Fuller community for a special worship service followed by a time of personal sharing and answering of questions about areas of evangelism and spirituality.

Carla’s experience is similar. Her husband is in the PsyD program. “I didn’t expect to be a single mother...being very much alone in the parenting role. You don’t come expecting it to be easy. You know it’s a doctoral level program. But for every hour of every day to be eaten up, you have to wonder.”

Devi, with three children and a part-time job to make ends meet, says, “I feel incredible pressure when my children are so small. I feel it as such a sacrifice. I want to be a mother. I want to be with my children. But we have to have the money.”

These women also plead to be taken seriously as partners with their husbands in ministry. They suggest that we look at setting aside finances in the annual budget for the development of a relevant training program for spouses, addressing their unique roles as parents and ministry partners. They appreciate tremendously new initiatives like the “Connections” weekend offered by the OCC. Karen adds, “Kathleen Hart, unfortunately, will not be around forever. We need to be planning for the future, budgeting for a paid chaplain to student wives, the cost of meeting space and child care.”

While these women have some constructive criticism to bring to this community, the overwhelming impression one has in talking with them is the depth at which they feel their call from God to parenthood, ministry, their husbands, and to this place. Their interaction is informed, thoughtful and sensitive. One is left with the impression that we have a tremendously valuable resource in these women for our community. Their voices need to be heard.

I received a grant from Fuller. Why isn’t it showing up on my account? Grant-in-aid from Fuller will be disbursed to your account in the sixth week of the quarter. If the units you are enrolled in currently are different than you originally anticipated, please come into the office and complete a change form. This will ensure the correct amount of grant-in-aid is applied to your account at that time.
