In December, Dr. John Court, Professor of Psychology and Director of the Psychological Center, will be leaving Fuller Seminary to return with his wife, Pam, to their home country of Australia. The Dean of the School of Psychology, Dr. Arch Hart, pays tribute to the ministry of the Courts during their years at Fuller.

I first met the Court family in 1977 when John was with us on sabbatical from Flinders University. Pam and John quickly endeared themselves to us and from time to time thereafter, we considered inviting Dr. Court to join our faculty. But it was not until the Directorship of our Psychological Center became vacant that we courted (no pun intended!) and won his heart. The Courts joined us in the middle of 1989.

Before going to Australia from England (hence that funny accent!), Dr. Court worked as a clinical psychologist for the National Health Service in Scotland. His commitment to the Christian faith was evident right from the beginning of his career. He took a strong interest in pornography’s distortion of sexuality, and has served as an expert witness on this topic in Britain, Europe and also here in the United States. He was one of the earliest psychologists I know to take the approach that pornography is a form of abuse against women. He is also renowned around the world as the foremost expert on the cross-cultural intelligence test, “Raven’s Progressive Matrices.”

When Dr. Court joined our faculty and assumed the leadership of the Psychological Center in April, 1989, the Center had outgrown itself. It had developed many service-programs but not all of them served the training needs of our School. Dr. Court’s first assignment was to consolidate the Psychological Center and to focus its energies more directly on the training of our students. In the almost 6 years that he has been with us, with a deep and sensitive commitment to our students, he has significantly reshaped our Psychological Center to be one of the premier training centers in the nation. The consolidation of several clinics into Fuller Psychological and Family Services has not only saved us significant expenditures but has brought about an integration of the various clinics that helps us to better serve the Pasadena community.

As he leaves us to return to Australia, where he will become the Director of Christian Counseling and Professor of Psychology at Tabor Theological College in Adelaide, he leaves behind a Psychological Center that is financially more stable and professionally more competent than it was when he arrived.

While Dr. Court has served in our School of Psychology, his wife Pam has been a diligent student in our Marriage and Family Division. Their return to Australia coincides with the completion of her doctoral studies.

The Graduate School of Psychology will not be the same without Dr. Court. It is not just that I will miss his warmth and personal support, but no one I know is able to create a pun as spontaneously and descriptively as John Court. Life is going to be awfully dull around here without him! Thank you John and Pam for your unselfish and dedicated service to our community.

I guess it's like taking the proverbial mountain to Mohammed. For many different reasons, there are women and men in all parts of this country who desire the benefits of theological education but are unable to be resident here in Pasadena. Fuller's Extended Education Program seeks to meet that need.

This year, Fuller Seminary will serve 1,500 students through Extension campuses in Southern California, Northern California, Washington, Arizona and Colorado. That number is almost equivalent to the number of students served here on the Pasadena campus.

October 20 and 21 saw the meeting here in Pasadena of our five Area Directors and their Administrators. I spent an hour with these men and women as we ate lunch together and chatted about their ministry. Not only was it easy to tell that these people love pizza, but that they love being together. Their identity as a team is strong, and their attitude to their shared task is inspiring. "It's a ministry!" says Debbie Borst, Administrator at the Colorado Springs campus. "I am able to use my gifts, knowing that I am contributing something to people who are out there spreading the good news of Jesus Christ. It's very fulfilling!"

Tom Parker, Director of the Arizona Extension, is equally enthusiastic. "We have some awesome students. That's what makes this ministry such a blast!" He continues, "Through our role we get to extend the ministry of Fuller to a place that's desperate for it. There are no theological seminaries in Arizona. We are the theological presence there."

Will Stoller-Lee, Assistant Director of the Colorado Springs Extension, speaks of the 20 year relationship this Extension has hosted between Fuller and the Young Life organization. "This is a great model of applying graduate education to ministry. Students in our classes come out of ministry contexts. They are practitioners. It is tremendously beneficial for students and faculty to have this creative tension between the pureness of scholarship and the crudeness of the practitioner."

Of course, there are always challenges to conducting a ministry so far from the administrative and academic hub of the institution. Dr. Art Patzia, Area Director for Northern California and Associate Professor of New Testament, says, "At times there can be a sense of isolation. I'm the only full-time faculty member representing the School of Theology, so I don't have colleagues in New Testament or any other division that I can go and visit with or discuss issues with." Dr. Patzia and the other extension-based faculty members look forward to opportunities such as this gathering and the faculty meetings they are able to attend.

In September of 1995, a new Associate Provost for Continuing and Extended Education will take up this position here at the Pasadena campus. Presently, Calene Williams, Assistant Director of Extended Education, gives focus and leadership to this ministry. Previously a Political Appointee with the Bush Administration in Washington DC, Calene came to Fuller one year ago with her husband who has entered the MDiv program. Already Calene's leadership and administrative abilities have made an impact upon the whole Extended Education team.

Calene concludes, "I appreciate the community's prayers that I will be able to, with dignity and honor, represent the goodness and commitment of the people who are out there bringing honor to Christ through their hard work."
It has come to my attention that not everyone on campus is a "pooter-head" (computer-head) like myself. Therefore I am going to take a week or two to lay a little groundwork for future columns, as well as assisting those of you for whom making any decisions about your computer is a matter of fear and trembling. (Trust me, you're not alone. There are many persons out there for whom the thought of using the car radio nearly sends them into shock.)

First, we will discuss some terminology with which you should be familiar, whether you are shopping for software or for a computer. So hold on! RAM (Random Access Memory) - basically the computer's "conscious mind." This is where the computer does its "thinking." Most new computers have at least 1 "megabyte," (MB) or the capacity to store about one million characters (letters and numbers). Four to eight MB of RAM in an IBM computer is a good starting point, and I believe that Mac memory needs are similar. Hard Drive - this is the computer's long-term memory. It's where the computer stores all of the programs it isn't using, as well as all sorts of other files and such. If you plan to use many programs, you will want at least 200 MB hard drive. CD-ROM - a use of compact disc technology to store lots of information for use by a computer. One CD-ROM disc can store up to 630 MB of information (a full set of encyclopedias, for instance). Modem - a device which enables your computer to talk on the phone to other computers. It's your gateway to the Information Superhighway. The Information Superhighway is a fictitious realm where every bit of information available to humanity may be accessed at the touch of a button. What we really have access to through our modems is a series of dirt roads taking us five million different ways to nowhere.

If you are in the market for a computer, here are a few things to look for. The first question to ask is: What exactly do you need the computer for? Bible research? Information superhighway (©)? Word processing? Desktop publishing? Games (heaven forbid)? This makes a big difference. Macs are better than IBMs for desktop publishing, but for many (if not most) other applications, there is a greater selection of IBM software to choose from. The Power Mac is a possible alternative, since it can use Macintosh and IBM software, so you get the best of both worlds. Another question of needs is whether to go portable or desktop. The "notebook" computer is very useful for classes, but you can't expand it as much as a desktop system, nor as easily. The most important criterion is clearly what you need. Don't let some computer salesperson (or a commercial!) tell you that you need CD-ROM, or a modem or 64 MB RAM and a 2 gigabyte (1000 MB - oh my!) hard drive, if you really don't. If you're not sure, find a friend and ask. Hey, even send me your questions. I can't make any promises, but I will do my best. If you do have questions and have access to a computer with a modem, call 792-2271 for the InfoXchange BBS and post the question in message area 3: Semi Columns. These columns will be posted there for reference. Or send me a note at FTS Box 290. Shalom!

MORE STORIES TO TELL

Fuller, in the fall of 1990 was an exciting place to be. New friends to make, a smorgasbord of courses and adjustments to southern Californian culture. The vast majority of students were sincere in their desire to serve God. That’s what I expected. People with a Godly calling. Women and men set apart for the work of the Kingdom. People of holiness.

Yet I had other unpleasant experiences. The professor for one class placed all his lecture notes on the reserve shelf of the library. Students were able to photocopy what they needed. After two weeks all the notes had vanished. Once again the lecturer replaced the notes. This time they were gone within a week. Then during a two hour mid-term exam, the teaching assistant extended the time by 20 minutes. After this extension he began to close the proceedings only to be verbally attacked by a number of students who felt they should have had even more time to finish. In another class I observed blatant plagiarism. And then in the computer lab during week 10 of my first quarter, I experienced language and attitudes that would have fitted well in an Aussie pub after a Saturday afternoon football game.

My emotions ran the full gambit from anger to disillusionment to sadness. At this privileged institution of Christian training, I was witnessing behavior that I felt shouldn’t be a part of the Church, let alone God’s leadership. But in the midst of my dashed expectations there arose a fresh awareness of my own inadequacies and weaknesses. There were plenty of dark shadows in the closets of my own life that the Lord was shining on.

I then began to understand that not all cultures have the same view towards possessions and academics. And that the pressures for some graduate students were immense - finance, church, family, multiple jobs, English as a second language, different cultural values and professors who were so overworked that they had little time to mentor. Was it any wonder then that there seemed to be pockets of unholiness on Fuller campus?

Four years later I sit reading in McAlistor library. In a one week period, I find three journal articles stripped from their bindings and on the floor the cover of a twenty year index that has been emptied of its contents. And I hear reports of student plagiarism and cheating on exams. Why do students do such things? Are the pressures so great? Or is it plain, old fashioned sin? Something to think about.

Warm regards in Christ,

Rob Gallagher

FROM ARTS CONCERNS...

“We want only to show you something we have seen and to tell you something we have heard...that here and there in the world and now and then in ourselves is a New Creation.” — Paul Tillich

Dear Fuller associates, students, and readers of the Semi: Arts Concerns is in the process of putting together a publication named Offerings from and for the Fuller Community. The focus of this publication will be seeing faith, community, and our life in Christ together through the Arts. Please, encourage the community by submitting your poetry, short stories, sketches, photographs, or other works to the Arts Concerns Committee through the ASC office. There will be a selection and editorial committee reviewing the entries. Offerings will be presented in February.

SWM CHRISTMAS BANQUET

Forget those week 10 blues and enjoy your privilege as a SWM student at the (free) SWM Christmas Banquet at Westminster Presbyterian Church from 6:45-8:45 pm and afterwards at Higher Grounds Coffee Shop. What will you miss if you don’t go? 1) Faculty’s most embarrassing cross-cultural experiences, 2) multi-cultural singing, 3) the last chance to definitely connect with faculty to get those incomplete forms signed. Child care is provided. Replies need to be in by November 14th.

CATALYST SURVEY

The ASC would like to thank all of you who have filled out a Catalyst Survey and returned it to the food counter in the Catalyst for a free drink or popcorn. Your input is important in our attempt to create a central student hang-out on campus that fosters student life (i.e. fellowship, food and fun).

THE BOARD OF DECLARATION

This board is for anyone - student, faculty or staff, who want to voice a concern or respond to issues presented on the board. No announcements or advertisements please.
A blessing is promised for those of us who set our hearts on pilgrimage; who choose to walk through life with God, in God, and for God. We are promised that we will go from strength to strength until such time as we come into perfect union with Life Himself.

As we commit to a life of pilgrimage, we will encounter places of stability and contentment; when life makes sense, when we have a confident serenity that God is known to be reliable, trustworthy, and available. In these seasons, joyful praise and thanksgiving easily intertwine our prayers and punctuate our petitions. Pilgrimage also takes us, however, through Valleys of Weeping, when all that we thought we’ve known of Him is called into question, and the very center of our lives seems to be out-of-control and confused.

Instead of denying my pain, confusion and anger, or covering them up with spiritual sounding platitudes, the psalms teach me that the biblical model demands that I deal with life as it really is. Nothing is out-of-bounds to share with God. No part of life; no feeling, no thought, no disappointment - even the most ugly and confusing should be withheld - but rather brought to speech and addressed to God.

This is the very stuff of which intimacy with God is made. This honesty and vulnerability brings us face to face with God. Even if our faces are contorted in anger, or bruised by abuse, or stained with tears of confusion and fear, it’s when our faces are turned to Him that we can begin to know His strength and healing. Our prayer will probably not be eloquent; but what God seems to care most about is simply that we come to Him.

It is an act of faith to pour out our hearts to God in the midst of the valleys of our lives; because in so doing, we acknowledge that He is the final reference for all of life. We are aligning with the truth that He has won the right to rule and reign in our lives, even apart from our understanding. We agree that He is God, and we’re not. In these times, when no human understanding or rationalization or platitudes will do, we find again that God is real, and really cares, and can really take us beyond ourselves, giving us a newness of life that is not of our own making.

Going from strength to strength doesn’t mean that we just leap from one mountaintop experience with God to another; but also includes crossing each valley with Him. I believe God wants to take each of these valleys, and in His time and way, redeem each of them, making our very pain a spring of new trust, new hope, new experience of His advent. May it be so even apart from our understanding. We agree that He is God, the truth that He has won the right to rule and reign in our lives, that He is the final reference for all of life. We are aligning with the truth of which intimacy with God is made.

On Friday evening, November 18, the Fuller Chapel Choir, joined by the Rim Festival Chorus of Lake Arrowhead and a full orchestra, will present portions of Handel's Messiah for the Fuller Seminary Fall Choral Festival.

Perhaps the most durable piece of "musical hardware" that exists today, the Messiah was composed in 1742 in just 24 days. It is based upon a compilation of passages drawn from the Prophets, the Psalms, the Gospels, and the Epistles, and is universally regarded as a work of divine inspiration.

Also included in the program will be seasonal works by Bach, Clausson, Cunningham and Kountz.

Soloists for the concert will feature Fuller students, Lisa Grubb and Jamie Parker-Frank (sopranos), Jillian Bell and Amy Arnold (contraltos), Marc Gold (tenor), and Kenny Boyd and James Rispin (basses).

Conductor Dr. Janet Harms, a distinguished organist and conductor, has over 25 years of choral conducting and teaching experience, having led college choirs on tours from Maine to Florida and throughout the Southwest. Educated at Juilliard, The American Conservatory, and Columbia University, Dr. Harms is currently Organist at Arcadia Presbyterian Church and University Organist and Professor of Music at the University of Redlands.

Dr. Harms was appointed Director of the Choir and Organist at Fuller in September, 1991. Under her leadership, the group has grown from a small group of 8 to 10 singers to a large concert ensemble of 50 voices. In her leisure time, Dr. Harms finds happiness in the company of her husband Paul and teenage children, Jacquelyn, Francine and Jonathan—all musicians in their own right.

The concert will be held at the First Congregational Church of Pasadena (corner of Walnut and Los Robles), 7:30pm, Friday, November 18. Tickets are $7 for general admission and $5 for students with current ID.*
