The recent “Million Man March,” which has been highly publicized in local news media, was an awesome event to experience and behold. I was one of those many men in Washington, D.C. that day, and I felt the overall message and theme was positive. A gathering of so many Black men from all walks of life and all different types of religions had never been done before because of so many differences and deep convictions, but this day it was done. The sight of Christians and Catholics, atheists and Black Muslims holding hands and hugging each other was both powerful and needed in the Black community.

I was skeptical about attending the “Million Man March” primarily because of Louis Farrakhan. I had heard a lot of arguments against him made by Christian organizations, like the National Baptists and the Progressive Baptists. I knew many other Christian groups, like N.A.A.C.P. and C.O.G.I.C., would not endorse or support the march. I was curious as to what Farrakhan might say. I felt his message was positive and basically true. I felt that anyone could have raised these points, and many probably have. The reason Farrakhan got such a great response, I believe, is that for the past fifteen years he has been holding small men’s meetings across the country. I can remember when he came to Pasadena quite a while back. He and the Nation of Islam have gone out into the streets and jails, visiting the down-and-out Black men who have had little or bad church experiences. They have cleaned them up, giving them a job, a suit, and a bow tie and putting them back out on the street to sell you a Final Call and a Bean Pie. All this without asking the government for anything. Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam make their own clothing and other products and even have their own restaurants. They have successful businesses and are well-organized; most of all they work diligently in the community.

I began to think about the response to the march in D.C. and the Nation of Islam and realized that this was a wake-up call to Black Christians and to the Church as a whole. There are still a lot of hurting and dying people out there who are not Now is the time for the Fuller community to take part in an extraordinary event that could change L.A.!

From November 12 through 18, six major Christian events are happening across Los Angeles. They include a pastors’ conference hosted by Jack Hayford; a fasting and prayer week organized by Bill Bright (special $25.00 conference rate for Fuller students); the First Global Conference on Prayer Evangelism with Ed Silvoso (volunteers needed; call Chad at 818-357-3471. Conference discounts available for volunteers); the 1995 Aglow International Conference sponsored by Women’s Aglow International, “Love L.A.,” hosted by Jack Hayford; and the 1995 Los Angeles March for Jesus (November 18 at 1 p.m., meeting at the L.A. Convention Center).

These local and international ministries chose the same seven-day period in November to come to Los Angeles to pray; there had been no mutual consultation. When the coincidence was discovered, the leaders of these ministries approached the churches in greater Los Angeles to see if there were ways to serve those churches while in the city. The response was a grassroots initiative to mobilize the Body of Christ in Southern California to seize this seemingly God-designated moment and pray for our city. Please join us for “Lift L.A.” from November 12 through 18!

Lift L.A. is asking for city-wide personal and corporate prayer and fasting during this week with the goal of uniting the church and healing the city. SWM Professor C. Peter Wagner hails this as an opportunity to “clear the way for the blessings of the Kingdom of God to pour out in our city.” Pastor E.V. Hill of Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church has said that it is “in times like these (that) our city must turn to God; He is our only hope. I fully support the efforts of Lift L.A. to bring the people of God to their knees.”

Won’t you join the expected thousands in prayer and fasting during this week? For more information, please contact Colm McCormack at 577-5985 or Wayne Graham at 577-1706.
Peter Harkema, Vice President for Student Life and Enrollment Services, is pleased to announce the following promotions in the Admissions and Financial Aid Offices:

For the past year, Hugo Bouse has served as the interim director, overseeing the Financial Aid and Admissions offices. Now it is official! Hugo has been named the Director of Admissions and Financial Aid. Hugo, originally from Cleveland, Ohio, received a Bachelors degree in Philosophy from Wheaton College. He entered the M.Div. program here, completing his coursework in 1991. Ten years ago, Hugo began his staff career at Fuller working in the mail room and later in student accounts. His wife Michele is a recorder in the Registrar’s Office and together they have three beautiful children; Sharon (11), Daniel (9), and Angelie (5). We congratulate Hugo on this well-earned opportunity to provide leadership in these strategic departments at Fuller.

Associate Director of Admissions Amy Habben has earned an increase in her supervisory and program responsibilities, and is integral to the leadership of our admissions program. Amy and her husband Christopher were introduced to Fuller by a Fuller trustee while Amy was working in the Admissions Office at Hope College, where she received her degree in business administration. She and Christopher, who has completed the coursework for his M.S. in Marriage and Family Therapy and is currently enrolled in the M.A. in Theology program, have been part of the Fuller community for three years.

David Dufault-Hunter has been promoted from Assistant to Associate Director of Financial Aid. He has increased responsibilities for day-to-day office management and financial aid policy implementation. David, who has traveled the world, received a degree in organizational communications from the University of Texas. The Master of Arts in Theology program at Fuller lured him to Pasadena in 1988. Here at Fuller, David met his future wife, Erin, also an M.A. student who is currently an Assistant Director in Admissions. Both David and Erin will soon complete their degrees at Fuller.

Hugo, Amy and David, along with the Admissions and Financial Aid teams, are commended for their dedication and good work on behalf of Fuller.

being ministered to. Who do we want to have ministering to them? I believe Fuller will equip me to be someone who ministers to them, and we as the Fuller family have and are gaining the tools to evangelize the lost and dying world. It is by no means us, but we preach Christ crucified and resurrected. If Christ be lifted up from the earth He will draw all men, women, girls, and boys to Him.

I know that God calls us as Christians to love our enemies and to love our neighbors as ourselves. I think we merely tolerate people we don’t want to deal with or those who hate us; we don’t pray for those who despitefully use us, much less rejoice when we are reviled. The answer lies here with us. Is God going to use us, his church, to bring unity, to minister, to hold out a hand or a job or a suit of clothes, or will he have to raise up a rock to speak the Gospel truth?

"Repairing Broken Relationships"

In May, my friend Wayne discovered he had AIDS. Faced with death at a much younger age than he ever expected, Wayne has begun to think seriously about his life and what is important to him. One of the conclusions that Wayne has come to is that before he dies, he wants to repair the broken relationships that exist in his life. He has succeeded in doing this in a very short time, and as he shared with me about these reconciliations, I was deeply moved.

You see, Wayne does not know Jesus Christ. His desire to be reconciled to his friends and family doesn't stem from his understanding of the Bible nor from Jesus' teachings on reconciliation, but from a desire to be at peace with those he loves. Wayne has some responsibility in these broken relationships, but most of them have occurred because of others' fear and ignorance. Most of the people in Wayne's life walked away from him - not vice versa. But from Wayne's perspective it didn't matter who had hurt whom; it mattered only that they be reconciled.

As I reflected on what Wayne had shared with me, I was really convicted about how I think of relationships in my own life. When someone has wronged me or walked away from me, do I seek them out and try to reconcile our differences? Honestly, my usual response is to confront the person and then if they don't respond I figure it's their problem and I give up, allowing some walls to stand between us. If I found out I was going to die tomorrow, would I respond in the same way? I think I would make a much greater effort to mend those relationships if I recognized how important it really is. But for the most part, my pride stands in the way.

The reason Wayne was able to reconcile those relationships was because he was willing to let go of his pride. The people he reconciled himself to didn't necessarily recognize the need for restored relationships with him. Wayne's approach was characterized by the grace and mercy that we Christians talk so much about and do so little of. I think we could all learn a little from him.

If you think about it, could you pray for my friend Wayne? Pray that as he has extended grace and mercy to the people in his life, he would be open to the grace and mercy that God extends to him through Christ. And maybe while you are thinking about it, you could pray that we, as the body of Christ, would take the Grace and Mercy that Christ has granted us and bless others with it.

May God bless you,

Laura Partridge
M.A. student, SOT

I almost felt like I was back in the country when I dined here. The jingle of the cash register took me back to the time when momma would ring the dinner bell to bring us in from the fields. Most of my family would be out working in the fields, but I was different. I was the vegetable taster/tester. My job was to make sure that each and every tomato, potato, eggplant, and squash was sun-ripened to perfection. There’s nothing worse than finding root rot in a nearly-perfect eggplant at the end of a nearly-perfect day!

Sorry about the tangent to my past, but I had to make a point. I am a perfectionist when it comes to vegetables. I must say that, although I subjected myself and my loved ones to seemingly millions of Kenny Rogers photos and bits of memorabilia during lunch, I did enjoy the country-style vegetables. The biscuits were pretty doggone good too, but they did me wrong by adding SUGAR to the cornbread; no self-respecting Southerner would add sugar to cornbread! We save that for cakes, cobblers, and pear pies. I did manage to forgive them, though, for that BIG mistake, but it cost them half a star.

The chicken I ordered was quite tasty, but they should have fed the critter a bit more. I think Jenny Craig got ahold of him before I did, ‘cause he was a little on the bony side. Despite the few shortcomings, lunch here was pretty good. Expect to dish out at least seven or eight bucks for lunch; not all fast food is cheap. Someone has to pay for all those pictures on the wall!

Until next time,

Dan
