Nicodemus on Birth and Rebirth

Listen Stephen: a paradox is not understood, it is received. A truth not caught by reason, but believed. The Law could never comprehend grace, but Law and Love met face to face, and Law was satisfied. Remember, Stephen, why he died.

And, after he was crucified, we carried him, Joseph of Arimathea and I, openly to the tomb, and buried him. I brought one hundred pounds of aloes and myrrh to pour in the folds of linen, and in those strips we wrapped his tragic corpse, laying him in Joseph's tomb freshly chiseled out of rock, within a private garden; we sealed the entrance with a stone.

I swathed his head last before we left; I cradled his face in my hands. I remember, it was like a rose drained of scent and color, fallen on that bed of pale stone, and I marked the roots of vine growing through a fissure in the wall above his head and thought of when he was alive, and I was dead.

I came by night the first time we talked, a Jew in darkness bearing a religion wrapped in grave clothes. I came with the Torah rolled behind my eyes, with the tablets of the Law saddled on my heart which followed its path by custom as a donkey plods unthinking into the Holy City. And—what? No, he did not denounce the Law or the Prophets; he called them from their graves! The words stood forth in my mind like a cypress stands in the sun...like Lazarus stood in the sun...like a willow sways in the wind.

Didn't I see it every day, we the Chosen on our chosen site, the walls, the Temple, and the ancient gates? Unless a man is born again... How can a man be born when the cord has long been cut? Can he, full-grown, become a child again; can he shrink back to swell again within his mother's womb? Wondering, I asked him. Unless one is born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God, he said. Carefully, on water and Spirit I pondered. Like you and I sit face to face, we sat, and the lamplight was glowing on his hands and painting his cheekbones and forehead while his eyes, still in shadow, held my own. And more he said, but I could not understand. The ancient gates of my heart shut dead; and walled around, my only Temple stood of marble and of stone.

I am old, and the old talk of death, but I will not. My heart burns hot within my creaking ribs like the oil lamp warms our fingers spread around it tonight. I am old, not dead, and tonight this potsherd glows. Shall I speak of birth? I told you how we closed him in the earth. But here wonder, like a vine, intertwines the mystery: earth gaped at his touch! Like a seed cracks the rock that crushes it, so he cracked Death, and rolled the stone away, the blossom, the firstfruits of those who sleep. No phantom Christ, when I saw him I saw immortal flesh: the ancient gates of my heart groaned open and I fell, weak and young, before this living Temple flushed with the blood pounding of eternity.

By James N. Fuller

MAY WE, LIKE NICODEMUS, EXPERIENCE THE REBIRTH OF CHRIST'S LOVE IN OUR HEARTS, AND THE JOY OF RENEWAL, AS WE APPROACH THE EASTER SEASON.
