Welcome back to Fuller!
by Richard J. Mouw, FTS President

It is always exciting to begin a new year at Fuller Theological Seminary. It is a pleasure to greet the new members of our community: new students, new student families, new faculty and staff and administrators. And it is good for the rest of us to gather, as we once again take up the important mission of "preparing men and women for the manifold ministries of Christ and his Church." This year, though, there are added reasons for excitement, as Fuller Seminary celebrates, throughout this entire academic year, the fact that we are fifty years old. Anniversaries are always important occasions. They are occasions for stopping to mark the milestones, and for reflecting upon the patterns of our journeys.

One of our former faculty members, the anthropologist Paul Hiebert, was fond of telling the story of a tribe who had a fascinating way of making important decisions. They not only consulted all of their present tribespeople, but they also talked with their ancestors and with their future children. We as Christians ought also to be able to hold similar "conversation"—not as participating in animalistic practice, but as taking heed to those whose voices have set our stage, as well as those who will interrogate us for guidance in days to come.

This anniversary year at Fuller Seminary will be a time for engaging in that three-way conversation. Obviously we will do a lot of talking among ourselves, as present members of the Fuller community, about what the Lord is calling us to be and do in these closing years of the millennium. But we will also be talking to our ancestors. For one thing, we will be welcoming some very real flesh-and-blood returnees: people who have taught and studied and contributed to our lives in other ways in the past, including some who were here in the early years of our existence as a seminary. And we will also be thinking much about our founders, and those who gave significant shape to this community through the years, and about the vision that inspired them.

One of my favorite books of a decade or so ago is Habits of the Heart, a significant study of North American society by a group of social scientists headed up by Robert Bellah. The Bellah team pointed to many problems in our contemporary culture, not the least of them being a cultural amnesia, an inability to remember those visions and ideals that inspired North Americans in the past. The authors called for the formation of "communities of memory," places where people can reflect together upon the older paths. Fuller Seminary thrives on memories: central to what we do is the constant recalling of the mighty acts of God in the past and teachings that have undergirded the faithful witness of Christians throughout the centuries. But I hope that in this 1997-98 academic year we can be a very special kind of community of memory, as we reflect together specifically on the accomplishments—and, needless to say, also the mistakes and the foibles—of our institutional past.

Not that we should be simply captivated by memories. There is a kind of wallowing in the recollection of past deeds and misdeeds that can be unhealthy for a community. The telling of our stories must be directed toward service, for building ourselves up for faithfulness in the tasks to which we are called by God. This is why we also need to talk to future generations. I am convinced that the future holds...

Reflections from India
by David Bayne, M.A. SOT, 1997

David, a very recent graduate of Fuller Seminary, sent the SEMI a journal from a three-week mission trip he took this summer. David took a team of nine from his church (Grace Community Church in Seal Beach) to India with the mission organization Word Made Flesh, which serves the poorest of the poor. We felt that, given the recent death of Mother Teresa, it would be appropriate to share David's thoughts with you in this first issue. The SEMI will continue to bring you, at various points throughout this year, features on alumni/ae and how they are experiencing God's faithfulness in areas of service from the mission field to the World Triathlon Championships.

We stepped off the bus and made our way towards Calighat, Mother Teresa's Home for the Dying. My heart and emotions raced as I anticipated the things I was about to see and experience. The streets of Calcutta had already confronted me hard with the realities of poverty. The open and desperate hands of the poor were everywhere.

As I entered the Home for the Dying, my heart ached for the people outside and now inside. There are fifty beds for men on one side of the home and fifty beds for women on the other side. They call this home Mother Teresa’s first love. It is a place where sick, suffering, and dying people can come to experience the love, care, and compassion of Jesus through the service of the sisters and volunteers from around the world.

My time at the Home for the Dying included doing laundry, washing dishes, offering a cup of water, passing out food, feeding those too weak to feed themselves, applying lotion on the men patients, and just sitting with the dying men. At times I struggled with what I could really offer those people I had come to serve.

My life was confronted with the pain, suffering, and struggles of the poor, but it was the hopelessness and despair beyond the physical suffering that hurt the most. The physical, emotional, and spiritual poverty of the masses was overwhelming. I decided to take Mother Teresa’s advice to heart and make the most of each present moment by serving the people with the love of Jesus, one person at a time.

God sent me to India to break my heart for the poorest of the poor. I came home with more questions than answers. At times I did not know what to say, what to feel, or how to respond. I do know, however, that I cannot live my life the same. My life and ministry in Seal Beach should be different in light of my experience in India. I pray that I will never forget!

Addendum written 9/8/97

India continues to confront me not only with the poverty and brokenness of the poorest of the poor, but also with my own poverty without Christ. While in India, I was frustrated and disappointed by my reluctance to serve the poor. I thought it would be easier. I was not prepared to be repulsed and sickened by the poverty and suffering that surrounded me. Too often I would quickly make myself busy with something else to avoid the more dirty and unpleasant tasks presenting themselves at the home for the sick and dying.

Writer Henri Nouwen summarizes well our human reluctance to face poverty: “We prefer not to see people who are destitute, we do not like to look at people who are deformed or disabled, we avoid talking about people’s pains and sorrows, we stay away from brokenness, helplessness, and neediness.” How true this was for me in India and how true it is as I face the poverty and brokenness in my own heart without the love and compassion of Christ. I would just assume ignorance and protect myself from the ugly realities of poverty and brokenness.

God took this new seminary graduate to India to shake and to break me. I am beginning to understand better what Henri Nouwen calls “wounded healers.” Only when we confess our own poverty and brokenness will we be able to minister to the wounds and suffering of those we serve. This lesson continues to be a difficult one to take to heart, but by God’s grace I pray that I may be faithful not to forget!

In the wake of the death of Mother Teresa and Princess Diana, SEMI staff have been considering how best to honor the service and memory of these women who gave of themselves to the poor and to children. Consider committing yourself, between now and the end of 1997, to volunteer the same number of hours in service you spent reading or watching media coverage of Mother Teresa’s and Diana’s funerals. If you spent two hours watching Diana’s funeral, commit to spending two hours volunteering your time between now and the end of the year. If you watched both funerals and all the surrounding commentary, commit yourself to giving ten or twenty hours in volunteer time this quarter.

Wondering where to volunteer? The best way to honor the memories of these humanitarian women would be to give your time to organizations serving populations they were committed to serving: agencies caring for children, for people with AIDS, for the poor and the destitute. There are several such organizations in the area. On October 9, the All Seminary Council Peace and Justice Committee will host a Volunteer Fair on campus to recruit people to volunteer for various social service organizations. If you are looking for concrete ways to honor Mother Teresa’s memory (or Diana’s), please consider giving a few hours of your time this quarter or this year.

Write for the SEMI!

This promises to be an exciting year, with the upcoming Jubilee celebration and various 50th-anniversary events throughout the year. If you're interested in writing an article for the SEMI on a topic of interest to you, please contact editor Laura Simmons at (626)584-5430. In addition, we are soliciting articles or submissions in the following areas:

- Jubilee-related themes: What does it look like for us as a community to observe a "Jubilee" this year? We do not literally own slaves, but many of us have "enlisted" others in some way and need to set them free. We may not be owed money by others—but are there ways in which we hang onto grudges as though they were promissory notes? The SEMI is looking for 500-700-word articles on themes related specifically to the Jubilee, to run in our next three issues this fall leading up to the October Jubilee celebration. (Call ASAP if you're writing on the Jubilee!)

- 50th-anniversary themes: Faculty: Did you attend Fuller as a student? What was the campus like then (buildings, grounds, facilities, etc.)? What were your required courses? What elective opportunities were there in the curriculum? Who were your classmates (anyone we know?) and what were they like 'way back when'? What's changed the most in 50 years, or during the time you've been here? The least?

- What are 50 things every new missionary needs to remember (or leave at home)? 50 books a pastor or a therapist should own? 50 changes in the M.Div. curriculum? 50 students to watch for in the news someday?

We'd love to hear from you: anything from a list or a paragraph to a page (10-point Times) is welcome.

- Themes related to Fuller's mission: What does it mean to you that Fuller is:
  * interdenominational?
  * multicultural?
  * international?
  * evangelical?

Did any of these factors draw you to Fuller? Have you taken advantage of them while you've been here? How have the various elements of the school's character changed you—for better or for worse? Send us a paragraph about your background and your experience of Fuller's mission, so we can compile a variety of perspectives.

If you submit an article, we'd prefer to have it on diskette ("text-only" format) and on paper. We promise to edit it for style, but we will endeavor not to change your content. Articles are published on a space-available basis, with time-restricted articles given priority. Send articles via campus mail to the SEMI, Box OSS, or drop off our office on the second floor of Kreyssler Hall upstairs from the Catalyst.

Volunteers Needed for Jubilee wonderful new things for theological education. The future belongs to the Lord, and to all who are aligned with his purposes. And if we at Fuller can stay attuned to the Spirit’s leading as new challenges and opportunities arise, the best is yet to come for our seminary. But the good things will not come our way automatically. We need to entertain new plans and experiment with some new strategies. And in all of this we need to be a thoughtful community, one that thinks carefully and deeply about what must happen if Fuller Seminary is to continue to be, in the decades to come, a vibrant center of theological, psychological and missiological teaching, learning, and research.

This can be a very special year in our life together, as we not only talk among ourselves but also consult with both our ancestors and our descendants. But we also have the normal goings-on in the Fuller community: teaching and learning, reading and writing, praying and singing, questioning and arguing—even enjoying food and small talk and jokes and games together! And all of this is ours to experience in a community of men and women from many nations of the earth, who have come together out of a deep desire to further the cause of Christ’s Kingdom. I hope that this is for all of us, whatever our role in the Fuller community, a memorable year in which we learn new lessons about what it means to be a community that remembers our past while we serve faithfully in the present with a bold vision for the future.

Welcome back, students! 10% Discount when you show your I.D. Offer good through October 18, 1997
Laura K. Simmons is our editor, returning for a third year of exciting journalism! Beginning her fifth (!) year at Fuller, Laura is a Ph.D. student in Practical Theology, researching the theological writings of Dorothy L. Sayers. She’s excited about coming features in the SEMI: Jubilee articles from Jim Butler and other members of the community; 50th-anniversary information and reports; more information about Fuller’s extensions and some of our alumni/ae; a review of bibliographic software from Terry Larm, and more! Laura adds, “We’ll be bringing you regular tidbits from the 1947-48 year, to show what was happening in the world during Fuller’s early days. We’ll be putting the spotlight on some new faculty members in our ‘Faculty Focus’ section soon. And, as always, watch our pages weekly for information on financial aid, events, and opportunities for campus involvement.”

Chris Low, our production editor and advertising manager, is responsible for the look of the SEMI, and he hopes that the readers will be able to easily find all of the information they need. Chris sez, “I love my job and have nothing but good things to say about the people I work with (especially when they forgive me for pushing everything right up to the deadline and throwing their schedules off...). If you’re ever on campus late at night and the office light is on, c’mon up and have a chat—tomorrow’s deadline can wait until tomorrow.”

Carmen Valdés, our managing editor, writes, “WELCOME TO FULLER!! This year, 1997-98, begins my third year as the Managing Editor of the SEMI and my 6th year on campus (I’m an M.Div. grad). It is a most wonderful job to have and I’m excited about the fact that we, Laura, Chris, Ruth, and I, are all returning. I’m looking forward to a great year.

As we begin Fuller’s 50th year, it will be an exciting and busy time for all who are part of the Fuller community, and we at the SEMI plan on doing lots of “50th” related stuff that will be of great interest.

I pray that as we gear up for the “Jubilee Celebration” you will find a place in which you are able to fulfill the call God has on your life. May God bless your time at Fuller whether you’re at the beginning or the end of your journey.

Blessings on the Journey!!

Each month this year, the SEMI will be bringing you glimpses of life during 1947-48, the year fuller was founded. It was an exciting and turbulent year, with a blight killing orange crops in California; the Olympics, fear of Communism, and the beginnings of an important presidential race stirring the nation; and international events and political partitions occurring which still impact our world today. The fall 1947 U.N. partition of Palestine gave birth to the republic of Israel and to Arab-Jewish conflict which continued throughout Fuller’s founding year.

Our chief source of information has been LIFE magazine, which brought us everything from representative advertising (which could generate an entire SUMO issue on its own!) to local, national, and international issues. Occasionally we found a special tidbit leading to more research and even, in one case, an entire article! So join us in each issue as we look at “Fifty Years Ago This Month.”
Interested in centering prayer and contemplative prayer? A group meets on Wednesdays from 12-12:45 p.m. in the Preaching Arts chapel. We practice the ancient prayer form of lectio divina, followed by 20 minutes of silent prayer. For more information, call Kim Powell at (626)584-5631.
