Like Father, Like Son
Christian Ethics and Peacemaking in the Stassen Family
by Laura K. Simmons, editor

The SEMI has been researching events from 50 years ago, to get a sense of the climate of the world and this country at the time Fuller was founded. We noticed a 1948 presidential candidate with a familiar name, and idly asked SOT professor Glen Stassen whether Harold Stassen was in any way related to him. Imagine our surprise when Dr. Stassen replied, “Yes, that’s my father...!” Harold Stassen was the leading Republican candidate in the presidential primary race that year. He lost the nomination to Dewey, unfortunately, after the Oregon primary, where Dewey practiced unethical debate tactics (introducing new information in the last rebuttal). Dewey went on to lose to Truman in a famous last-minute upset (we’ve seen the photo of Truman triumphantly waving a newspaper with the headline, “Dewey Beats Truman”).

Harold Stassen continued to run in almost every presidential election up until 1992, as a way of getting his ideas out into public conversation. Some of his suggested policies were picked up by other candidates, so he has continued to have an influence on American political life. His first major political involvement was as governor of Minnesota, where he was elected for three terms and, at age 31, was the youngest governor in U.S. history. Stassen also served as president of the University of Pennsylvania, from 1948–1952, and was president of the American Baptist convention for two years.

One of Harold Stassen’s most important contributions, according to his son, was as one of the U.S. delegates for the United Nations charter-writing assembly in 1945. Delegates from many nations negotiated the details of the charter; it was a complicated process to achieve agreement on all elements. When the charter was finally written, the world press covering the assembly took a vote on which delegates contributed the most. Harold Stassen and the ambassador from Australia won. He also was Director of Foreign Aid under President Eisenhower, after persuading Eisenhower to run as an alternative to Taft.

How did Harold Stassen’s political involvements influence his son? According to Glen Stassen, “We both have a strong Christian commitment to peacemaking.” Glen started out as a nuclear physicist, and one of his professors had worked on the Bomb. Glen’s commitment to peacemaking goes beyond an opposition to nuclear weapons now, though. He shares passionately with the SEMI his concerns about land mines, for example: “A fundamental rule of Christian ethics is that you can’t use weapons against civilians—they’ve got to be used against military targets. A land mine can’t tell what’s a civilian and what’s not...” 25,000 people a year are killed and more lose body parts to land mines—most if not all of these people civilians. Stassen points out that the United...

Day of Prayer

As it is for many of us, prayer was at the heart of several major turning points in the life of Dr. Charles E. Fuller. God called him to be a preacher in the middle of his workday, and he spent hours on his knees in the sawdust of the orange-packing house. When God called Charles to begin the Old Fashioned Revival Hour, he woke in the middle of the night with a burden to pray until morning. And when God gave Fuller the conviction to build a new seminary, several nights in a row he was awakened and prayed until he fell asleep again.

On Wednesday, October 29, the Day of Prayer will begin with a short video about the life of Charles E. Fuller, portraying how, through prayer, God used him for great and mighty things. Catch a glimpse of his heart for God and how out of it came the vision for the Old Fashioned Revival Hour and Fuller Theological Seminary. Then join us as we worship and pray in response to our collective past, for our present, and with a heart for our future. There will be time for repentance, adoration and supplication. We will pray both as the whole body of Christ and in small groups. In addition, as a community, we ask you to consider undertaking a fast for 24 hours before the Day of Prayer (to be broken at a reception following the prayer activities).

This information was compiled by Karen Peacock.
States government is the biggest block in the international process to ban land mines; indeed, very soon after our interview our government renewed its opposition to an international ban.

Glen Stassen's interest in peacemaking permeates most of his life, and has for some time. As a graduate student, he co-founded Duke University's civil rights organization, the Christian Interracial Witness Association, in a movement to integrate Durham, North Carolina. He was the “action chair” of the ecumenical movement in Louisville that led that city to be the first in the South (and Kentucky to be the first state) to have open housing laws—predecessors to today's nationwide equal housing opportunity laws. He later was “strategy chair” for the U.S. Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign.

This involvement led Glen to seek a new paradigm for a Christian ethics of peace and war—what he calls “just peacemaking theory.” He proudly reports that a group of 23 scholars he has been coordinating has just reached consensus on such a theory. He gathered authors of various denominational statements on peace; authors who have written on just peacemaking; some of the best professors of U.S. diplomatic history and international relations; experts on conflict resolution; and biblical scholars like Fuller's own Judith Gundry-Volf together to study just peacemaking theory in depth. In May, their findings will be published in a new book called Just Peacemaking: Ten Practices to Abolish War.

What can Glen Stassen's work on peacemaking teach us as a seminary community? He reminds us that “The Bible clearly calls us as Christians to be peacemakers, but lots of Christians don’t know how.” Stassen also points out, “The words for justice occur 1,060 times in the Bible. From beginning to end it focuses on the kind of justice that restores the poor, the widows and orphans, the foreigners and the outcasts to community.” Stassen's upcoming publication and some of his other publications spell out ways in which Christians can be more intentional about peacemaking. He has one book that describes how to form an “inward/outward peacemaking group”—Stassen sees small groups as one way to change the church and the world. (He also firmly believes that the peacemaking movement in East Germany was behind the fall of the Berlin wall and the subsequent changes in that part of the world.)

Peacemaking does not extend only to diplomatic relations between countries, though. Glen Stassen also discusses the “opportunity to make peace in families and peace in churches.” He is quick to admire his own family, saying that he “could never be as good a husband” as his father is (Harold has removed himself from the political sphere to take care of his wife), and talking enthusiastically about the scholarly accomplishments of everyone from his sister to his sons. Glen has recently taught “Practices of Nonviolence” with Nancey Murphy, using church case studies to talk about conflict resolution within the church. He mentions that conflict resolution was one of the top three things graduates of the seminary where he used to teach wish they had learned in seminary, but did not. (Ray Anderson has commented similarly that conflict resolution is a skill essential in church work, but very rarely taught in seminaries. David Augsburger teaches it at Fuller.)

There is not room in this paper to discuss all the implications of just peacemaking theory for Christians and seminarians, or to share all the fascinating things we learned from talking with Glen Stassen. If you are interested in learning more about his peacemaking theories, consult one of his books (including Journey Into Peacemaking, Authentic Transformation: A New Vision of Christ and Culture, and Justice Creates Peace), take one of his classes, or just sit him down and talk with him! If you want to read more about Harold Stassen's 1948 presidential campaign, stop by the SEMI office and peruse our old LIFE magazines.
City of the Angels Film Festival

“I did not have to read books to know that the theme of life is conflict and pain...”

This is not a meditation on the stressful life of your average Fuller student; it is a statement from Charlie Chaplin, acknowledged as the ‘grandfather of modern cinema.’ It has been said that suffering, in all its dimensions, was at the heart of Chaplin’s laughter.

Chaplin’s film City Lights, which took four years to complete (shooting on one well-known boxing scene lasted a whole month!), will kick off this year’s City of the Angels Film Festival at the Directors Guild of America Theaters in Hollywood. City Lights will show on Friday, November 7, both at 5:00 p.m. and at 7:00 p.m.; other evening films on the 7th are Kid Auto Races in Venice and the poignant What’s Eating Gilbert Grape? (followed by a discussion with executive producer Alan Blumquist). On Saturday, November 8, viewers can choose between Tokyo Story at 2:00 in the afternoon and Taxi Driver at 9:30 p.m. (which will be followed by a conversation with producer Tony Bill). Sunday, November 9, will bring Zoot Suit (at which we will be joined by Edward James Olmos, a film festival regular, and Luis Valdez) at 2:00 p.m., Killer of Sheep at 5:00 p.m. (followed by a discussion with writer and director Charles Burnett), and The Year of Living Dangerously at 8:30 p.m.

Tickets for the festival are $7.00 for a single admission or $5.00 with a student identification; passes for four or seven films are also available. Check the Garth during the lunch hour this week and next for a Film Festival table where you may pre-purchase your tickets. Remember to call Raedorah Stewart Dodd at (626) 584-5591 if you are interested in volunteering to help with this year’s festival!
