First Impressions of Fuller
by John Goldingay, David Allan Hubbard Chair of Old Testament

This is Dr. Goldingay’s first year teaching at Fuller Seminary. He comes to us from St. John’s College in Nottingham, England, where he was principal. Dr. Goldingay shared some of his “first impressions” at the Fuller breakfast during the American Academy of Religion/Society for Biblical Literature conference in November. We asked him to put his thoughts on paper for the rest of the Fuller community.

Pasadena
• It’s wonderful to be here! I’m still in the honeymoon period, and I hope it lasts forever. Even my wife Ann, who didn’t want to leave where we were before, now says she likes America.
• Where’s the famous smog? Well, the mountains did disappear for two days in September... But do people go on about it because they have to find something to fault about Pasadena?
• The other snag about Pasadena, we had been told, is the crime rate. At least we have had a police chase concluding in our condo’s garage. Dean Bill Dyrness saw it on TV; I was writing a commentary about Isaiah at the time.
• One of the great things is cycling to J&hn’GOldingay (center) with colleagues Leslie Allen (left) and Robert K. Johnston at the 1997 Payton Lectures.

Just being a professor
• Another great thing is not being responsible. This spring I had been principal of a seminary in Britain for nine years, and I had a sense of God’s giving me permission to say that was enough—for the seminary and for me—and that I could go back to being just a professor and concentrate on being a writer, a pastor, and a teacher. Fuller is a great place to do that.
• It’s still extraordinary to come in each day and find that there aren’t two or three hours of things to do on my desk, so that there is no reason why I shouldn’t slope off to the library.

Fuller
• I wondered whether I would find Fuller rather isolating compared with an Anglican seminary where we are together daily for worship, not to say coffee and lunch. But I have found that there is much more interaction than I feared there might be, and a great personal and spiritual warmth and sense of welcome.
• Because the fall schedule was fixed before I was hired, last quarter I only had to lead a Ph.D. seminar on Old Testament theology. It’s wonderful working with a group of people so bright

LORD ACTON ESSAY CONTEST

The Acton Institute for the Study of Religion and Liberty is pleased to announce the 1998 Lord Acton Essay Contest. This year's contest is based on this quotation from Lord Acton:

"The moral foundation of political economy is not the satisfaction of appetite but the fulfillment of duties. Labour, patience, justice, peace, and self denial are the mainsprings of economical production, and the metaphysical basis of the science is not in a philosophy which reduces religion and science to mere satisfaction of an appetite, like eating or drinking, but in the verification of the promise, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His justice and all these things'—the necessaries of life—'shall be added unto you.'"

In 1998, the Jubilee Celebration goes on the road. All five of Fuller's extension sites, and three other locations, will host events in the upcoming months to mark the golden anniversary of the seminary. By now every member of the seminary community knows that this is Fuller's 50th anniversary. Even some of the Gen-Xers in our midst have begun to sing the familiar chorus of "Heavenly Sunshine." But what you may not know is that 1997-98 is also the 25th anniversary of Extended Education at Fuller. Our extension sites are preparing for a Silver and Gold celebration in 1998.

The road show will begin in Colorado, January 16-18. Colorado claims the unusual distinction of simultaneously being Fuller's oldest and newest extension site. Fuller's presence in Colorado Springs dates back to 1954 when the late Dr. Paul K. Jewett was invited by the founder and president of Young Life, Jim Rayburn, to direct an Institute to provide seminary-level training each summer for the Young Life staff. Donald Hagner, to become the Dean of the IYM Summer Institute. Don served in this capacity for over 15 years.

Over the years the Colorado program has represented the first formal partnership of its kind between a seminary and a parachurch organization to provide a seminary degree program to the entire Young Life staff. Dur­ ing this transition Dr. Jewett stepped down from his leadership role in the program and asked a bright young newcomer to the Fuller scene, Donald Hagner, to become the Dean of the IYM Summer Institute. Don served in this capacity for over 15 years.

Caring for An Alzheimer’s Patient
by David Wu, Ed.D., Center for Aging Resources

The man sounded distraught as he described his wife’s changed behaviors over the last three years: wandering during the night, moving furniture, hoarding food and unwashed utensils, not recognizing her adult children.

Caring for a family member afflicted with Alzheimer’s disease or another related disorder (e.g. stroke, Parkinson’s, Pick’s) is an experience for which few people are prepared. In counseling families caring for such family members, I often give three guidelines.

First, don’t try to do it alone. Involve family members, friends, the church, community resources, and/or hired assistance. Use a board-and-care or residential facility for temporary respite. Consider an adult day care program which can provide respite for the caregiver and social stimulation for the patient.

Second, take care of yourself emotionally and physically. An Alzheimer’s patient may require endless hours of supervision and assistance for years. The caregiver is the unrecognized victim. While you may learn to see the positive side, and come to sense God’s peace and help in difficult experiences, it is nonetheless important to care for yourself. Join a support or therapy group; plan for time off; and get physical rest, adequate nutrition, and socialization.

Third, continue learning about different ways of handling problem behaviors. An Alzheimer’s patient’s behavior changes during the course of the disease. Different problems surface as the patient loses more judgment, orientation, communication ability, and ability to do daily tasks. More and more, social workers, nurses, psychologists, and senior centers are able to provide information about caregiving resources.

Fuller, through the Center for Aging Resources (CFAR), sponsors the Community Assistance Program for Seniors (CAPS), an Alzheimer’s day and care resource center.

Easter/Passover testimonies sought

The SEMI is soliciting brief (150 words or less) testimonial on Easter and Passover from members of the Fuller community. Do you have a significant Easter memory? Are you someone for whom Passover has special meaning? Do you celebrate both holidays—and, if so, how do they integrate for you?

Anything you would like to share which will enhance our community’s experience of the holy weeks in April is welcome. Testimonials should be submitted on paper and on diskette if possible (text-only format) to the SEMI (Box OSS, email semi@vax.fuller.edu) by March 3, 1998. Submissions from your family members—including children—are welcome, as well.

If you have questions, please contact SEMI editor Laura Simmons at (626)584-5430. If you are interested in writing on another topic, send us a draft of your article for consideration or come by our office (second floor of Kreyssler Hall, upstairs from the Catalyst) to discuss the subject on which you’d like to write.

and enthusiastic about Old Testament study.

- Our seminary in Britain was more mixed theologically than Fuller, and initially at least I am appreciating working with a team who “sing from the same hymnbook.”
- Taking that metaphor more literally, admittedly it feels a bit quaint to return to the songs of evangelicalism of the 1950s in which I was brought up—but maybe we have been singing those more than usual because of the Jubilee celebration. I myself feel more at home in the “Tuesdays at 10/Making Space for God” slot in the Catalyst than I do in the other times of worship, even though I am bewildered to find how many of the charismatic songs American students know by heart I have never heard before.
- Many people I meet, from the provost onwards, come from Pentecostal backgrounds, but I have yet to see a working out of the expectation that God speaks and acts now. Fuller evangelicalism feels like British evangelicalism before the charismatic movement, which is really odd as we associate John Wimber not least with Fuller (and of course are grieved over his recent death, though rejoicing to know he is with Christ).
- Another difference from Britain which became clearer when Linda Peacore came back to lecture is that I think the U.K. is behind the U.S.A. in the development of women’s place in society, but ahead of evangelicals in thinking about the issues.

Questions I’m beginning to think about

- I’m intrigued by the depth of involvement in questions about theology and spirituality and about the relationship between theology and culture. I’m especially pleased at our taking movies seriously. There are some such questions I hope someday we may think some more about.
- There is the theology and spirituality of work. The national commitment to eating all the time, mostly things that aren’t good for you, affects Fuller as much as anywhere else. There’s never a faculty retreat or a staff meeting which doesn’t give the opportunity for continuous grazing. And I join in! But I’m uneasy about it.
- There is the theology and spirituality of the automobile. Because my wife Ann is disabled and finds it more and more difficult to get into an ordinary car, we haven’t bought a car. Of course we have a house near the seminary, and we have shaped the rest of our life around not having a car, in a way you can do when you are starting a new life. And we don’t have to take kids to football games. Now I don’t really know what we used to do with a car for. The rest of the world thinks that America is holding the world back in making progress, with the tyranny of the motorcar and its potential to destroy the planet. I wonder whether a seminary in California isn’t the place that should take a lead in thinking about a lifestyle in which the tyranny is broken?
- There is the theology and spirituality of technology. Fuller, as much as anywhere, is the victim of technology, from the phone system to our attitudes toward computers to the temptation to let the educational process be technology-driven—to do what we do because it is technologically possible.
- There is the theology and spirituality of activity, relaxation, and freedom. Britain and America are driven societies, but it’s more obvious to me here that the Church and Christians share in the relentless activity. Everyone is rushing about, knowing they are over­ busy but feeling victims rather than in control of their lives. Might a seminary model an alternative? At least we need to be thinking about it.

It is wonderful to be working in a place where there is interest in thinking about such questions and a capacity to think creatively about them which is unequalled anywhere in the world.

Attention: East Asian International Students
A message from the President’s Cabinet

Fuller Theological Seminary has become increasingly aware of the economic crisis that is currently affecting many countries in East Asia. While Fuller acknowledges that this is a complicated situation that may not have positive solutions in the near future, we want to partner to assist students who find themselves in financial difficulty due to this situation.

As a temporary form of assistance, Fuller would like to offer an extension of the tuition deferment policy. Any student who has been affected by the East Asia crisis, particularly those from Korea, Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia, and Hong Kong, may apply for this extension.

International students in this situation who have not yet registered for winter quarter, or who have registered and have not cleared their student accounts, will be permitted to apply for a tuition deferment through the spring term. This will allow you to carry a tuition balance on your student account through and including the spring term. Additionally, Fuller will reverse the interest charged to your account during this period (Fuller will take responsibility for the interest).

Fuller Seminary will continue to monitor this situation and will evaluate what action may be needed to assist students further.

Students who wish to apply for the tuition deferment must come to the International Student Services (ISS) Office.

Please know that we on the President’s Cabinet are in prayer for you and others affected by the economic crisis.

The Supreme Court ordered the state of Oklahoma to admit a Black student, Ada Lois Sipuel, to the University of Oklahoma Law School.
