PLENARY SESSIONS

"THE AMERICAN YOUTH CULTURE: MARKETING OR MINISTRY?"
James Bratt and Lambert Zuidervaart.

What is "youth" in today's world? Is it a distinct stage in life or little more than a lucrative market segment? Whatever the case, understanding demands careful attention to youth culture - the products and symbols that relieve boredom, provide delight, and create identities. This session will look at the "youthification" of the adult world evident in self-absorption, entertainment and materialism. Amid all of this, the boundary between youth and adulthood blurs. The calling and theory of youth ministry demand re-evaluation. Many "successful" ministries may only worsen grave and deep cultural problems.

"THE HEART OF ROCK: SELF, SEX, AND SCHOOL"
Bill Romanowski and John Worst

Popular music is a prime means of communication in youth culture. On the one hand, rock music reflects the social patterns and concerns of adolescents - identity, meaning, and sexuality. On the other hand, the rock industry supplies maps for dealing with these issues in a confusing and rapidly-changing world. What does rock say about teenage identity, sexuality and school? And what kind of alternative does contemporary Christian music provide? This session looks at video clips, listens to music and suggests some perspectives on popular music in youth culture.

"THE STORIES OF OUR LIVES? TV, FILM AND THE VCR"
Roy Anker and Quentin Schultze

TV and film are visual and aural storytellers. What do the stories mean? Why are some of them more popular than others among American youth? This presentation will assess the significance and impact of these stories, from slasher flicks and "sexploitation" movies to soap operas and rock videos. In addition, the discussion will focus on the cultural and technological backdrop that fosters the visual media and their enormous but misunderstood influence. Finally, the session will suggest what types of visual stories and viewing situations might redeem a generally bad predicament.
