North Meets South

by Dae Ryeong Kim

History was made when South Korean President Kim Dae-Jung was greeted by his North Korean counterpart Kim Jong II as he arrived for an historic summit in North Korea on June 13. The world watched with amazement as the reclusive North Korean leader appeared at the airport to greet President Kim personally in a lavish welcome ceremony. As the two leaders shook hands on the tarmac, highly emotional scenes were playing out around them. Hundreds of women in traditional Korean costumes were celebrating this dramatic moment, jumping up and down with joy, raising their hands and waving paper flowers.

There is something in the telling of this historic moment of jubilee celebrated by the Korean nation that reminds us of how the two brothers Esau and Jacob in the Old Testament story met together after their twenty years of enmity and separation. This time the South and North Korean leaders met after fifty years of enmity and separation since the Korean War. It is also reminiscent that President Kim Dae-Jung limps just as Jacob did at the time of his brotherly reunion.

As a black limousine took the two leaders into Pyongyang, the capital city of North Korea, hundreds of thousands of excited citizens lining the street welcomed the South Korean president, cheerfully waving bouquets of pink flowers. For South Koreans, this warm and lively welcome by North Koreans was rather surprising because, until then, the former had a stereotyped image of the latter as only a ballistic communist regime and a Stalinist totalitarian society.

On this day, seeing the sign of hope for reconciliation and reunification after five decades of the Cold War, seventy million Koreans jubilantly cheered. The first sweet fruit of the historic Korean summit was that hundreds of Korean people could be reunited with family members during August 13-15, 2000, after fifty years of separation. This significant development gives hope to the other millions of Koreans whose cheeks are wet with tears for missing family members.

Fifty years ago, the two Koreas went to war, hoping to reunify the nation by force in favor of their ideologies. For this war, one brother was drafted into the North Korean army, while the other was enlisted in the South Korean army. After Road Trip! Moving With The Spirit

Road Trip! Moving With The Spirit is the theme of this weekend’s City of Angels Film Festival. In this film genre, the road and the vehicle seem to interact with the characters that follow a spirit of movement toward self-discovery and transformation. The eight-reel lineup needs almost no introduction. But just in case you are among those who turn your back on films older than you are, consider changing your mind for this one.

In the 1953 French thriller The Wages of Fear, four men risk their lives by driving two large trucks of nitroglycerine across rocky and unstable Venezuelan back roads. These men are at the bottom of the social structure; they face fear, driving at a painstakingly slow pace, for want of money.

It includes more action-less frames than a Hollywood editor would ever allow, but every moment of the dangerous road trip creates tension that satisfies. The Wages of Fear is for those who rate films by the distance their butts travel toward the edge of their theatre cushions while the characters travel toward the end of the unfamiliar road.

The spirit of the road which compels these men begs Lola to run after a desperate solution for her boyfriend and is the same road which leads the bushman to search for the crazy gods so he can return a cursed (curiously bottle-like) object to them. And we call these Frenchmen, Germans and Australians our brothers and sisters when, in their travels, they find themselves.

He has won the prestigious award for implementing his “sunshine policy” for warming ties with North Korea across the final frontier of the Cold War. It sounds paradoxical, but he firmly believes that you can take off someone’s overcoat not with a stormy wind but with the warmth of the sun. Indeed, the iron curtain no military power could draw open, his sunshine policy opened! But it would be equally important to note that he was not alone in pursuing peace with North Korea, that there have always been countless unknown soldiers of prayer who—with broken hearts and in the weakness of limping limbs—never ceased their intercession for North Korea.

While we are deeply touched by the way North Korea is sharing the reunification vision with South Korea, we need to be aware of hidden motives as well. The red regime has made the desire for reunification a historical cause of their communist party. Therefore, we need to ask who will be the Lord of the Korean peninsula when reunification is achieved—God or atheistic materialism? This is why we cannot hope for real reunification without a vision of Jubilee.

While celebrating this historic Korean summit, we also want to have a Jubilee vision to proclaim the liberty for those who had been deprived of their spiritual heritage. Christianity was flourishing so much in North Korea prior to the Cold War that its capital city Pyongyang had won a reputation as the “Oriental Jerusalem!” But when the Korean War broke out in 1950, the Communist regime condemned Christianity for its association with the Western world and closed all church doors. Now North Korea is listed as an unreached country in spiritual mapping. But while North Korea still remains an atheistic nation with its Marxist doctrine, her people have felt keenly their spiritual needs. Indeed, let us have hope and the Jubilee vision for North Korea as we see that her door is ready to be opened to those who will bring the Good News of redemption.

Specializing in the area of missiological homiletics in the context of modernity/postmodernity, Dae Ryeong Kim is now in the fifth year of his Ph.D. program. In light of his lifelong ministry goal for mission to former communist countries, he has a Web site at <http://private.fuller.edu/dakin> where he updates what is happening in North Korea and Russia.
"A Church for the Average Joe: People Who Don't Like Structure Tend to Feel at Home at 'A Jesus Place'" by Tobin Perry in The Wenatchee World (Wenatchee, WA), September 8. SWM's Edmund Gibbs is quoted in this article about a new church called "A Jesus Place for Joe Average," planted by Don Gibbs of Chelan, WA. Members of the church show up wearing shorts, eat during the service, and are even allowed to interrupt the pastor. Dr. Gibbs states, "contemporary churches [like this] are popping up all throughout the country." He also emphasizes that "the mark of these churches...is participation, humility and honesty" and that the movement "cuts across all denominational lines."

"Becoming a Lifelong Learner: The Antidote to Spiritual and Intellectual Stagnation" by J. Robert Clinton in Worship Leader, Sept-Oct Issue/2000. In this article, SWM's J. Robert Clinton argues "a major characteristic of most successful spiritual leaders is the development of a lifelong hunger to learn."

"Can We Talk?" by Sylvia Foti in Central California Parent, October 2000 issue. SOP's Linda Wagener is quoted in this article discussing communication between parents and pre-teen children. According to a survey of fifth- through eighth-graders, "most parents and their pre-teens spend less than an hour a day talking to each other." Wagener states, "It's a difficult time for all involved because at this age they are starting a new phase of separating from the family" and that "parents must continue to be patient and always ready to listen."

"The Prodigal Cub: Viewers See Good and Evil in this Story, but are They Reading Too Much Between The Lions?" by Sandi Dolbee in the San Diego Union Tribune, October 20. SOT's Robert K. Johnston is quoted in this article discussing the messages contained in the Broadway musical, The Lion King, now playing in L.A. Some say this musical "is a fable. And like any well-done fable, it comes with moral lessons woven into each act and song." Johnston warns against "over-theologizing" but "does see several lessons within this fable. Among them: messages about the father-son relationship and about destiny."

Photo Directory 2000 The Registrar's Office is pleased to announce that the annual Pasadena Campus Student Photo Directory is now available—but in a somewhat different form than before. In an effort to save a significant amount of money, we have made the directory available to download, view, and/or print on your computer. On Campus Pipeline, you will find it on the School Services page. Click on the title Student Photo Directory 2000. The file is 4.7MB, and takes 15 minutes to download with a 56K modem. Use the free Adobe Acrobat Reader to view or print this file—a link is provided. Adobe Acrobat Reader also allows you to search the directory with the FIND tool.

If you do not have a Campus Pipeline account yet, go to www.fuller.edu, click on the Campus Pipeline logo there, choose Campus Pipeline Account Setup, answer a few questions, and log in. In the future we hope for you to be able to search for students, view their photos, along with their accompanying address and phone number, among other things, all online with Campus Pipeline—without any downloading or other program. But, in the meantime, we hope you find this directory download useful.

Reflecting Our Diversity The Multicultural Concerns Committee is calling for donations of artwork or objects from any part of the world. The Catalyst and other campus buildings are being decorated to reflect the ethnic diversity of the student body. Question of the Week:
Why do or don’t you observe the Old Testament biblical Sabbath?
Greg Livingstone
SWM Adjunct Faculty
I do observe the Sabbath but not as outlined in the Old Testament. I understand the Sabbath to be the 1-day-out-of-7 principle ("and ye shall not work") and I’ve understood it as not touching my “To Do” list—anything on the list I’m not touching.

Ron Kernaghan
Staff and SOT faculty
Because I worship God on Sunday, I could give you a four-hour class on that answer if you like...

Kent Yinger
Staff and SOT adjunct faculty
First, because the churches I’ve worshipped in have held their services on Sundays [and] because I believe that in Christ the particular day of the week chosen for worship is irrelevant.

Chap Clark
SOT faculty
I do observe the biblical Sabbath—as filtered through the book of Hebrews. My discipleship journey is centered on a desire to walk with Christ, RESTING in his grace.

Theological Research as a Spiritual Journey
by Jean-Paul Heldt
Perhaps because of my research on the Biblical Sabbath at Fuller, I am often asked whether I am a Messianic Jew, a Seventh-day Baptist or Adventist, or a member of the Worldwide Church of God. Others who do not ask, perhaps, simply assume that I must be researching and writing from a particular denominational perspective, and thus am defending my particular denominational doctrine or agenda. I realize that such a practice is commonplace, especially at denominational seminaries. Fuller is no denominational seminary...

Reality, for me, has been quite different. I came to Fuller without any denominational support nor agenda. I simply came to do research on the Sabbath in order to pursue a personal spiritual journey and satisfy a theological quest borne out of my personal experience. In the early 1990s I began to observe a discrepancy between the churches’ practice of Sunday worship and the biblical instructions about the seventh-day Sabbath (Matt. 28:1; Ex. 20:8). As I prayed and searched scriptures, I became more and more convinced that there was no convincing evidence or biblical basis for Sunday rest. I thus decided to test the validity of my new understanding of Scriptures and keep Saturday free from work-related activities (yet without refraining from “doing good on the Sabbath” as we are instructed in Matt. 12:12).

“Writing a dissertation, as preparing a meal, does not need to be a chore: it should be fun and enjoyable!”

At a job interview for an important position, for the very first time in my professional life, I asked (and received) permission to keep Saturday free from work. After I took the job, however, my new boss reneged on his commitment to give me Saturday off (as he changed his mind on several other issues we had agreed upon), and it wasn’t long before I was out of a job. I believe that this dramatic and bizarre experience, played out in a wider context of spiritual warfare, had an indirect bearing on the disintegration of my marriage four years later. Losing a job and my family over my decision to honor God’s Sabbath was not an issue I could take lightly. I wanted to know the real meaning behind the Sabbath above and beyond a day of rest and worship. I wanted to understand why the Sabbath was not an issue I could take lightly. I wanted to know the real meaning behind the Sabbath above and beyond a day of rest and worship. I wanted to understand why my family and I had suffered so much for my wanting to keep it. Was I suffering foolishly for “doing wrong” (1 Peter 2:20; 2 Peter 2:12-13) or simply persecuted for wanting to “live a godly life” (2 Tim. 3:12)?

By now I have spent almost three years and nearly $60,000 of personal savings and student loans to investigate this deeply existential question without any denominational support. And yet the dividends have been immeasurable—physically, mentally, economically, emotionally, socially, and spiritually. This has been the greatest adventure of my life. For the first time in my life, I felt that I was “fulfilling God’s purpose for my life at this time.” In the movie Chariots of Fire, Eric Lidell is heard saying, “When I run, I feel the pleasure of God.” Well, I am no Olympic champion running for a medal, but when I do research, reading, teaching and writing, I, too, feel God’s pleasure!

Now that I finished both tutorials and comprehensive exams, I am poised to write my dissertation on the “Sabbath as a paradigm for mission.” In my tutorials, I have looked at the Sabbath issue from a variety of perspectives (biblical foundations, power encounter, soteriology, wholistic mission and development, eschatology, history, worldview and worldview change). David Hartono, a friend and former Ph.D. student, once described to me the research process in culinary or gastronomic terms: “In the tutorials, you go to the market and collect your data which are the ingredients (vegetables, rice, meat, spices); once you have assembled, cleaned and chopped all the raw materials, you are ready for cooking your favorite meal: you use onions, tomatoes, a little bit of salt and garlic, add some vinegar and some ginger, and stir-fry as you go along. This last stage is what happens in your dissertation, it is the creative part where you pull everything together. It is the fun and productive part.”

Writing a dissertation, as preparing a meal, does not need to be a chore: it should be fun and enjoyable! What contributed to my enjoyment is not only having access to

She voted! We caught Dr. Betsy Glansville on her way out of the Refectory on Tuesday and identified her as a proud voter as well as a SWM adjunct faculty member. So how many of you voted on Tuesday (if you were able to)?

Back for now. Currently living in Tokyo, Japan, Ph.D. student Paul Shew is back on campus for the SWM annual missiology lectures. In fact, he’s giving a paper as part of the series!

Marvelous tools such as Endnote 4.0™ (an indispensable bibliographic software available at the bookstore), electronic Bible software, and CD-Roms with myriad historical and theological documents available from AgesLibrary.com™, but the encouragement and support from countless friends, fellow students, staff and faculty. Some even began observing the Sabbath on their own. Others were not quite as enthusiastic about my research...

“How then has my research changed me in the course of the past few years?” (This was the question posed to me by the SEMI.) I have learned that the Church is bigger than any particular denomination. Even though I attend Lake Avenue Church in Pasadena, and occasionally Episcopal, Presbyterian and Messianic congregations, I consider myself first and foremost a member of the Body of Christ. After all, this is the only Apostolic church that is mentioned by name in the New Testament (Rom. 7:4; 1 Cor. 10:16; 1 Cor. 12:27; Eph. 4:12). As Paul wrote many centuries ago that in Christ there is no Jew nor Greek (Gal. 3:28), today Paul no doubt would write “there is no Presbyterian nor Episcopalian, no Catholic nor Orthodox, no Seventh-day Baptist nor Latter-day Saint; for all are one in Christ...” And if we are one in Christ, why not worship Him on the day He set as our example: “...and he went to the synagogue, as his custom was, on the Sabbath day” (Luke 4:16, See also Acts 17:2 RSV). If the “Sabbath was made for man [and woman, too, I believe]” (Mark 2:27), why not make better use of God’s free and eternal gift God has prepared for us from the beginning of Creation (Ex. 20:8) and for us to be enjoyed for all eternity (Isa. 66:23)?

This is the challenge and implication of my research for myself, for the churches worldwide, and for every member of the Fuller community regardless of our denominational affiliation! Not as a condition for salvation, but rather as an outflow of our redemption in Christ (Ex. 20:6; John 14:15).... Shabbat Shalom!

Born in France, Jean-Paul Heldt is a 3rd year Ph.D. student in Theology of Mission at the SWM. His doctoral research at Fuller is about the sabbath/jubilee as a paradigm for mission. He is also known on campus as “Mr. Endnotes™”, for promoting a piece of software that helps students (and faculty) take the tedium out of writing bibliographies. He is also an advocate of total fitness through daily exercise, proper diet, and rest. He can be reached by email at jpheldt@fuller.edu.
